Even as he was speaking, a battered, grizzled, unkempt, unwashed specimen of elderly humanity came limping toward them, bearing in his hand a rusty old double-barreled shot-gun.

"Look out," whispered Bing to the captain; "thar's no counting onto these yer Crooked-Pine boys. They're most likely layin' low for somethin'."

Then he added, aloud:

"I say, stranger, whar hev all the boys gone ter? What's got inter Crooked Pine?"

"Is that you, Bing?" drawled the man with the shot-gun. "Why, whar hev you been? Nothin' ain't got inter this yer place—that ain't what's the matter—but every livin' soul 'cept me has got out of it. Old Bing, I tell yer, Crooked Pine is a dead town."

"You don't say!" exclaimed Bing, with what the captain took for a groan; but the latter aimed his nose at the man with the shot-gun, and asked him:

"What did the town die of, and what made you stay here after it was dead?"

"Die of?" drawled the shot-gun man—"die of? Why, they've made another town, twenty mile away, over onto the new roleraid; and they do say it beats this yer city all holler. What made me stay? Why, stranger, I never seen a roleraid, and I don't want to; and so, when the boys begun to clar out for that thar new city, I just bought thar improvements. I got some on 'em powerful cheap, I did, an' I won three hotels at one raffle, I did. Biggest luck you ever seen! And I kep' on and on, buyin' and winnin', till I reckon I own the whole town, and the graveyard, too. It's a fine graveyard, and it's got an awful good start; but it's just the deadest town you ever seen. What do I stay for? Why, what should I go for? Don't I own the hull of Crooked Pine?"

"Cap'n," said Bing, mournfully, "I reckon he's tellin' the truth. I've known this yer sort of thing to happen before. Do ye know what I'm gwine to do?"

"No, I don't," [illegible]

"Wall, you kin wait for yer cavalry-men, if you want ter. I'm gwine to ride right on into that thar other town, on this old mule. I'll ride right in thar. Mebbe I kin find some of the boys, and anyhow I want to see if that thar roleraid kin put another white skeer onto old Bing. Cap'n, Crooked Pine's just the deadest town I ever see."

"Whack" went the stub-whip on the tough hide of the old mule, and on went Bing, as if he knew his way and disdained further information; and, while the old man with the shot-gun stood looking dreamily and wistfully after him, the captain wheeled his horse, gave him a sharp dig of the spur, and galloped briskly away down the valley, from the lower end of which there came just then the far-away, faint, ghostly notes of a cavalry-bugle. It was as if even music refused to be lively in so dead a town as Crooked Pine.—Appletons' Journal.

A Dutiful Son in Prison.

The Philadelphia Sunday Dawn tells this story:

A lady who was some ten years ago left a widow with a small family of children, after much tribulation succeeded in bringing up to manhood one son, who proved himself able and willing to be a support not only to her, but to his younger brothers and sisters.

About a year after becoming of age he was offered a lucrative position in the west, and he emigrated thither, and settled there permanently, soon married. New ties, however, did not absorb old affections, and as he prospered in his business, he sent regularly to his mother the means necessary for her support and that of her family.

The years passed on and brought many changes, but still regularly as the quarter came, so also did the ample remittance of this model son and brother.

When the tide of emigration turned to the far-west, this son was carried with it to Omaha, where he invested his earnings in town lots which speedily rose in value and made him a man of wealth. At least this was the intelligence he sent his mother. Lately, whilst visiting Auburn, his parent was invited to make the tour of the State Prison, and whilst passing through the various wards she accidently encountered one whose presence caused her cheeks to pale and her heart to temporarily stop its beating.

It was her son—her good and well-beloved boy—who for years had been her pride and support; for a moment she was speechless, but at length bursting into a torrent of tears, in which the prisoner joined, she said: "O, my son, how came you here?" His story being told developed the fact that he had by trading with strangers come into the possession of a large quantity of counterfeit money, and that in ignorance of its character, he being on a visit to New York, had attempted to pass it, had been arrested as a chief of a gang of counterfeiters, and having been identified as having endeavored to circulate it, was, in spite of all evidence of previous good conduct offered, convicted and sentenced to serve out a term in State Prison. His wife, with whom he was in constant correspondence, had aided him in keeping his incarceration a secret from his mother, and had regularly remitted the quarterly allowance together with letters forwarded to her from the prison by him. But for this unfortunate visit the mother would have remained forever unaware that her son was serving out a penal sentence for a crime never committed by him. She learned, however, that by the rise of corner lots in Omaha he had been made a wealthy man, and when he should come out of prison, which would be in a few months, he, through the skillful stewardship of his wife, would find awaiting him the sum of not less than two hundred thousand dollars in United States bonds.

One Hundred and Forty-five Years Old.

[From the Philadelphia Bulletin.]

At the southeast corner of Fifth and Locust streets stands the grocery of Mr. James Clark. A very unpretending grocery and an unpretending grocer. But now the grocery has a place in antiquity, and all through the laying of a foot-walk.

Mr. Clark had served out dried beans, measured molasses, sliced ham, and weighed salt mackerel at said corner for twenty years and odd. This house was occupied by his father before him, and has an aged appearance—the house has.

The sidewalk surrounding the store and the two houses on Locust street was very much dilapidated, and it was deemed advisable to lay a new one. The work was commenced yesterday. As long as Mr. Clark can remember, the house No. 430 Locust street, immediately back of his establishment, has had in front of the door an old marble or soapstone slab. When the pavement was removed, this of course, was taken up. The bricklayer, upon turning it over, was surprised to find that it was a veritable tombstone, on which was the name and age of a person who died ll of years.

It contained the following inscription:

In memory of
Mrs. —— Allison,
Wife of Robert Allis——
Who departed this l——
April the 20th, 1769,
Aged 145 years.

The stone is about three feet high and eighteen or twenty inches wide. The words given are all very plain, but where the dashes occur the inscriptions have been effaced by age and the wearing away of the soft stone. The age of the venerable lady shows that she was born in the year 1624.

If it can be established that Mrs. Allison was 145 years old when she died, she was certainly older than any person who has lived in modern times, of whom there is any account, except "Old Thomas Parr," who was born in 1483, and died in London, Nov. 15, 1635, aged 152 years.

Mark Twain's Active Journalism.

Buffalo has many reminiscences of Mark Twain, and of his remarkable attempt at publishing a newspaper on an entirely new plan. After his return from the Holy Land (per Quaker City), Mark took a wife and purchased the third interest in the Buffalo Express, owned by A. M. Clapp, Public Printer. They say that Mark's style of newspaper work was unique. He was not an early riser, and is as slow of movement as of speech, consequently he didn't get to the office very early in the morning. And when there his movements were not characterized by nervous haste. Seating himself in a capacious pivot-chair, his first move was to deposit his boots in the waste basket, and replace them with roomy slippers. Then elevating his slippered feet to a comfortable cushion on the exchange papers (their only legitimate use in his estimation), it was his wont to lay back in his chair, swinging himself lazily on his pivot, and tell stories of wit and wisdom by the hour to the associate editors. This was vastly pleasant to all concerned, but somehow it did not work in the way of making a newspaper, and at the end of six weeks Mark came to the conclusion that publishing a newspaper was not his forte. He, however, retained his interest in the Express for about a year and a half, though, as aforesaid, he did not take part in the "active" management for more than six weeks.

Wrestling Match—America vs. England.

An international wrestling match between Albert Ellis, of London, England, and John McMahon, of Rutland, Vt., champions of their respective countries, came off last week, in New York. Members of the sporting fraternity from Philadelphia, Baltimore, Boston, Chicago, and other cities were present, and showed great interest in the match. McMahon weighed 192 pounds, while Ellis turned the beam at 138. Homer Lane, ex-champion of America, was agreed on as referee, Mike Coburn acting as umpire for McMahon, while Robert P. Browning, of Cornwal, England, officiated for Ellis. McMahon had the advantage in weight, Ellis in agility and skill. Look after lock was made and broken with the greatest rapidity and dexterity, until finally McMahon threw Ellis heavily, and claimed the first fall. A scene of confusion followed, the friends of Ellis claiming that only one of Ellis' shoulders had touched the ground. The match at this point showed evidence of breaking up. The fall, however, having been acknowledged by Ellis, the play proceeded, and McMahon lost the next fall by a foul, accidentally given, and promptly acknowledged. Fourteen breaks were then made, Ellis avoiding falls by turning while going down, and carrying the house with him at every display of his extraordinary quickness in getting [illegible] from the left hip, and an inside lock during the swing, McMahon threw Ellis heavily on his back, and gained the third and deciding fall. So the championship was won by McMahon.

An Eccentric Land Owner.

S. B. Clover, in an October magazine, tells the story of a member of the Van Rensselaer family who lately died, at the age of 76, as follows:—

Some said he was niggardly and penurious; the poor declared he was kind and generous, and forbearing and indulgent to a fault. That he was averse to improvements or changes of any kind, the dilapidated condition of the house in which he lived, and the decayed and tottering fences around, most clearly proved. No railroad was ever constructed, no manufactory ever built upon a foot of his land, save under protest. Owing to a disappointment in early life, due to the opposition of his relatives to his marriage with a young girl in the humbler walks of life, to whom he was warmly attached, he lived and died a bachelor.

The General Government had essayed many years ago to tempt him by a munificent offer to sell a portion of his lands for the establishment of an arsenal. The prospect of increased wealth, the assurance that the sale of his lands, and the erection thereon of buildings by the United States Government, would greatly enhance the value of his large estate surrounding, had no effect. His refusal to sell was positive, and the purchase of land was made, and the arsenal erected, at Watervliet.

But a darker hour came. A passenger who crossed from Albany on the Greenbush ferry-boat brought the startling report that it was in contemplation to construct a railroad along the east bank of the Hudson river from the city of New York through Greenbush to Albany. When the survey was made for this road, it took in five acres of the Van Rensselaer land, which yielded the owner little or no profit. Efforts were made by the directors of the road, but without success, to effect a purchase of the land. Persistent refusal to sell on the part of the owner compelled them to call upon disinterested parties living in the neighborhood to appraise the land. The sum fixed upon as a fair valuation was three hundred dollars per acre, which was offered to the owner, but peremptorily declined, under protest, with the assurance added, that if the company took his land he would never touch a dollar of their money.

The land was taken, the road completed, and nearly a quarter of a century passed away; and though on many occasions greatly pressed for ready money, he was faithful to his promise even unto death. To the surprise of his executors, a short time after his decease, they were notified by an officer of one of the banks in Poughkeepsie that fifteen hundred dollars had been on deposit to his credit since the road was first surveyed, and was then subject to their order. Thus, for that long period, was the interest, which, added to the original amount, would have accumulated to a handsome sum, entirely lost to this eccentric man while living, and to his heirs after his departure.

A Falling Off in Exports from Great Britain to the United States.

A Washington telegram says: From a statement received at the Treasury Department from an official in Europe, relative to the principal articles of produce and manufacture exported from Great Britain to the United States during the eight months ending Aug. 31 last, in comparison with the corresponding period of the year 1872, it appears that there were exported to this country 281 tons of iron, 309 tons less than in 1872, almost 200 tons of which decrease is in the exportation of railroad iron. The decrease in the exportation of wool to this country last year amounted to 630,000 pounds, a decrease of over 900,000 pounds in woolen cloths. The decrease was nearly 1,000,000 yards in woolen carpets, almost 1,500,000 yards in worsted stuffs, nearly 5,250,000 yards in cotton piece goods, nearly 21,000,000 yards in linen piece goods, more than 8,750,000 yards in silk and broadcloths, and in spirits nearly 7,000 proof gallons. There was a large comparative falling in tons of lead and salt, and in the values of ribbons, mixed material, haberdashery, hardware and cutlery, and earthenware, whereas there are small increases in the amounts of tin plate and unwrought tin, and in ale, beer, alkali, and stationery.

The Sharp Man.

The sharp man iz mistaken for the wize one, but he iz just as different from an honest one.

He trusts tew his cunning for success, and this iz the next thing tew being a rogue.

The sharp man iz like a razor—generally too sharp for enny thing but a shave.

Theze men are not tew be trusted—they are so constituted that that they must cheat somebody, and, rather than be idle or lose a good job, they will pitch onto their best friends.

They are not exactly outkasts, but liv cluss oa the borders ov criminality, and are liable tew step over at enny time.

It iz but a step from cunning tew raskality, and it iz a short step that iz alwuz invitin tew take.

Sharp men have but phew friends, and seldum a konfident. They hav learnt tew fear treachery by studying their own natures.

They are alwuz bizzy, but, like the hornet, want a heap ov sharp watching.

The sharp man iz alwuz a vain one. He prides himself upon his cunning, and had rather do a shrewd thing than a kind one.—Josh Billings.

Value of Timber Lands.

Railroads consume timber immensely. It has been estimated that each day in the year trains run about three hundred and twenty thousand miles, consuming one a half cords of wood for every twenty-five miles, making a daily consumption of nineteen thousand two hundred cords. Sixty thousand miles of road require two thousand five hundred ties to the mile; and assuming their life to be five years, an annual consumption of thirty millions of ties is required; and it may be safely said that the waste in getting out these ties is one-third of the tree.

FUR-FETCHED FANCIES.

Lucinda threw away her book, tossed back her pretty head,
And going back to olden times of which she just had read,
Remarked, "What strange old Guys they were, those ancestors of ours,
Who in the skins of beasts themselves decked out, the odious Giaours!"

"Ah, yes! that's just like women, they speak before they think,"
Quoth John to Miss Lucinda, "So, prithee, do not shrink,
While I in words a picture paint of savages a group,
Whose beads and feathers, furs and skins suggest the wild war-whoop.

"In cape of Russian sable, Siberian ermine muff,
Jacket of glossy South Sea seal, in hue resembling snuff,
Balmorals trimmed with narrow strips of marten or of fitch—
There goes a wild young sauvagesse, reputed to be rich.

"She-Vandals are abroad, likewise, in sacques of otter skin,
With silver fox all trimmed without and nappy lined within.
She-Tartars walk in fiery fox, the Cossacks all in lynx,
While others for their show depend upon the little minks.

"And yonder, on the avenue, see two barbarian blondes,
Whose paniers, if club-talk be true, are stuffed with railroad bonds,
In camel's hair arrayed are they, while squirrels and chinchillas
Their furs contribute to the robes of these untamed gorillas.

"So history itself repeats; to-day our Guys and Giaours
Are clad in wild-beast skins just like those ancestors of ours;
The only difference to note is that, in olden times,
Folks caught and skinned the beasts themselves, and saved their precious dimes."

An Opening Speech.

The Erie (Pa.) Observer is responsible for this: "In the early days of Pithole, the pious oil men thought it necessary to have a Sabbath school. One of the leading young men was chosen superintendent. The position was new to him, but he determined not to shrink from the responsibility. Thinking that it would be proper for him to make a little opening speech, he cleared his throat and started in as follows: 'Children, you are very fortunate in being born in a Christian land. There are thousands in the world not so fortunate. It is peculiarly gratifying to know that you live in that portion of the earth where the rock pours forth rivers of oil. Now, my dear children, there's the Mormons, they worship old Morm; there's the Mahommedans, they worship old Mahom; the Heathens, they worship old Heath; the Hindoos, they worship old Hind; and there's the Pagans, they worship old Pag; while here we are worshiping whom we please. Teachers will now hear their classes recite.'"

Obstinate Roots.

There was recently on exhibition, at Plymouth, Mass., a piece of 2-inch water-pipe, 7 feet in length, taken from the section on the dam at the Thread Company's Works, which was so completely filled, its entire length, with the fine fibrous roots of the willows that are growing near by, that not one drop of water could pass through it. A depression in the pipe had at some time caused a slight breakage, and into this a portion of the root had insinuated itself and grown, until about a month since the passage of water was stopped, and a search for the cause revealed this result. A portion of the filling was taken out, and resembled closely a continuous "wad" of oakum. For five or six feet these roots are so tightly wedged in that no force yet applied has been sufficient to start them.

Important to Insurers.

The following statement is well worthy of the attention of property-owners all over the country:

Insurance placed in companies that have not complied with the laws of the State where the property insured is situated (either by the company direct or through agents or brokers), cannot in case of loss be sued for and recovered in any of the United States or State courts, and the assured is left entirely at the mercy of such companies, and without legal remedy.

The statutes of all the States impose certain conditions upon all insurance companies (chartered by other States) to enable them to obtain authority to transact business, and make binding contracts within the State, and without having first complied with such laws, and obtained the legal authority to do business, all insurance written by them is illegal and void.

The following is an abstract from a recent opinion of the Attorney-General of the State of Indiana upon the subject: "As the statute prohibits any foreign insurance company, directly or indirectly, to take risks, or transact any business of insurance in the State, without first procuring legal authority, this includes a prohibition upon any person or corporation (not duly authorized) from acting in any capacity as insurance agents, either by soliciting applications or collecting money upon premiums. A policy issued by an agent in violation of a law, declaring his act to be criminal, has been decided by the Supreme Court to be void, after a destruction by fire of the property insured (20th Indiana, p. 520), and in a recent case not yet reported in Indiana (Hoffman vs. Banks) the general doctrine is confirmed."

This opinion is clear and decisive, and has since been confirmed by judical decisions in that State (People vs. Plessner), and the principle again recognized by the Kentucky Court of Appeals, and by Judge Davis, of the Supreme Court of the United States, presiding in the United States Circuit Court in Indiana, and is now held to be a well settled law.

Insurers may, therefore, well understand that in accepting policies in such companies, they are wholly without indemnity against loss, except at the caprice of the companies whose illegal and void policies they hold.—New York Mail.

Capt. Jack's Gun.

[From the Portland (Oregon) Bulletin.]

The gun which the defunct Modoc chieftain, Capt. Jack, fired during the late unpleasantness between him and the Government is now in the office occupied by Gen. Davis as his headquarters. It shows the effect of hard service, and apparently often came in contact with hard rocks, for it is scratched in every part, scarcely a spot an eighth of an inch in extent being untouched. It is one of the old muzzle-loading rifles of the pattern of 1863. The lock-plate contains the following inscription: "U. S. Colt's Pt. & F. A. Mfg. Co., Hartford, Conn., 1863." It is rather an unwieldly weapon, and is very long—about four and a-half feet. The barrel alone is forty inches in length. It has three sights, one being marked for a hundred yards, another for three, and the third for five hundred yards. The sling is made of a piece of leather, which was apparently broken in the center, for at that point it is kept together by two copper rivets, and it is fastened in the bands by pieces of buckskin. The upper band is made of tin, and is fastened to the stock with four small, headless nails. This piece of mechanism is apparently the work of the hero of the lava beds, and it shows that he prided himself on how neatly it was done."

The Blow-Fly.

Mr. G. A. Rowell has recently made an astounding calculation respecting the blow-fly. On the authority of Reaumer, he says that one fly will produce 20,000 eggs, which are hatched almost as soon as deposited. Maggots issue forth, and almost immediately begin to feed, and twenty-four hours increases their weight 200 times. In eight or nine days they are fully grown. They then assume the pupa state, and after another period of about the same duration, come forth perfect flies. A month, therefore, is rather more than enough for a generation. Suppose that of the 20,000 eggs half produce females, then in the first family there will be 10,000 flies, each capable of producing 20,000 eggs. A very simple calculation will show that at this rate, in less than six months, the sixth generation will number 2,000,000,000,000,000,000,000,000. If every fly is half an inch long, a quarter of an inch wide, and the same in depth—that is to say, if thirty-two of them occupy a cubic inch—there will be enough of them to cover all England and Wales to the depth of 3,800 miles, or the entire world, both land and water, to the depth of a mile and a quarter. Fortunately for afternoon nappers, the juvenile blow-fly has a terrible number of enemies, and very rarely lives to attain parental dignity.

Tobacco in the Tissues.

That tobacco is absorbed in the tissues of the body has long been asserted by some, though denied as positively by others. In support of the affirmative, a fact in connection with the hydropathic process known as the wet-sheet pack is cited. In this process the patient is enveloped in a wet sheet, and then, over this, in blankets. By this means, it is claimed, that through the operation of the principles of endosmose and exosmose, the water of the sheet is made to enter the body, while at the same time impurities are withdrawn therefrom. Now, on an habitual user of tobacco being subjected for an hour to this process, it is found, on his envelopments being taken off, that the odor of tobacco coming from his body, and from the sheet in which he has lain, is perceptible to every one present.

Rapid Transit.—The earth is going round the sun at the rate of 66,000 miles an hour, or 1,100 times faster than the fastest express train moves. The earth is also revolving on its axis at a very high rate of speed, proportioned to the distance of its surface from the axis. At the equator it is 1,040 miles an hour, or 17 a minute; in the latitude of London the speed is 11 miles a minute; at Rekiawits, a Polar town, it is 7 1-2 miles a minute; at the Poles it is nil. The earth has several other movements, one of the less exactly measured being that through space in common with the whole solar system, which is estimated at 487,000 miles a day.

Extraordinary Tragedy—A Game of Cards for a Human Life.

A curious story comes to us from Heidelburg, Germany, of a game of cards in which the stake was a human life, and one of the players was a young man named Silfred Meyer, a student from Chicago. The game was played in the Ritter Hotel, and the contestants were four young men who had been most intimate friends. The time was the 9th of September, and the circumstances preceding and subsequent to the terrible test are briefly as follows: All the young men were students, and the day before the eventful one on which the ability of each as a card-player was tried to its utmost, all had been at the Swann Tavern, where their wassail was carried to such an extent that from the joyous they turned to the joking, and from the latter to the serious, when a slight occurrence jarred their good humor, and ended fatally to one of their number. It caused an angry retort, and one of them, Count Ottendorf, called Meyer, the Chicago student, a "cowardly Jew." The words had no sooner left the lips of the heated young German than Meyer had answered by extending a challenge. This was accepted at once on the opposite side, and then the mode of carrying out their project suggested itself. Young Meyer, in a tone of considerable excitement, proposed that the entire party should repair to the Ritter Hotel, and there play a game of "sixty-six," the loser to shoot himself with a pistol. The proposal was accepted, and the four students repaired to the hotel.

Ludeken, one of the four, in some way obtained two loaded pistols from a gunsmith's near by, and a room was ordered in the hotel and cards and wine sent up. The young men then seated themselves to their work, the fourth student dealing the cards. Meyer and Ottendorf were each supplied with a pistol and the awful game commenced. For some little time there was no apparent turning on either side, so that the stake made the issue all the more terrible. It was an eventful moment when Meyer obtained a single advantage, and Ottendorf, seeing all was lost, suddenly jumped up, exclaiming, "Adieu, my friends!" and, seizing his pistol, shot himself through the right temple. He fell to the floor a corpse, and his horrified companions looked on the dead one moment, and then fled from the room. The noise of the shooting brought the landlord on the scene, but not before the students had escaped. He immediately gave the alarm, and the police started in pursuit. They succeeded in capturing Immich, who made the above statement. Ludeken and Meyer fled across the French frontier and so got beyond the German line. The dead Count was the son of a wealthy landed proprietor in Westphalia, and at the time of his death was but 19 years of age.—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

The German Tariff.

The new German costoms tariff went into force on the 1st of October. As far as simplicity is concerned it is a great improvement upon the old tariff, there being only 14 numbers of articles liable to duty. The principal feature of the new tariff is the reduction of the duty on iron. Pig iron of all kinds will not be liable to duty in future. Chain cables and wire ropes for river navigation purposes are free of duty from 1st January, 1877. The duty will continue to be calculated according to hundred weights and not according to kilogrammes, and all declarations at the custom hosues are to be made in hundred weights and pounds. Export duties are abolished, and thus the duties hithesto paid on rags, etc., will not be levied on their being exported in future.

There is no Death.—If it be true that Nature abhors a vacuum, it is equally true that the Great Creator abhors death and glories in life. There is really no such thing as death—the term is a misnomer, used to designate the changes which occur in life. Life, eternal life, is created by the laws of Almighty will-power, which are as immutable in their application as is the existence of the Creator Himself. When God made life, He made everything necessary to sustain it, but left it for man's progressive intelligence to discover, convert and utilize. Good medicine is to the ailing physique what good fuel is to the expiring flame; the better the fuel, the quicker the fire—the better the medicine, the quicker comes relief from pain. California Vinegar Bitters is life's elixir for old or young. Use this medicine properly and you will live to a good old age without those physical ailments which make seventy years a burden. 15

AYER'S SARSAPARILLA, FOR PURIFYING THE BLOOD.

This compound of the vegetable alteratives, Sarsaparilla, Dock, Stillingia and Mandrake with the Iodides of Potassium and Iron makes a most effectual cure of a series of complaints which are very prevalent and afflicting. It purifies the blood, purges out the lurking humors in the system, that undermine health and settle into troublesome disorders. Eruptions of the skin are the appearance on the surface of humors that should be expelled from the blood. Internal derangements are the determination of these same humors to some internal organ, or organs, whose action they derange, and whose substance they disease and destroy. Ayer's Sarsaparilla expels these humors from the blood. When they are gone, the disorders they produce disappear, such as Ulcerations of the Liver, Stomach, Kidneys, Lungs, Eruptions and Eruptive Diseases of the Skin, St. Anthony's Fire, Rose or Erysipelas, Pimples, Pustules, Blotches, Boils, Tumors, Tetter and Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Ringworm, Ulcers and Sores, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Pain in the Bones, Side and Head, Female Weakness, Sterility, Leucorrhœa arising from internal ulceration and uterine disease, Dropsy, Dyspepsia, Emaciation and General Debility. With their departure health returns.

Has made the most astonishing Cures; so quick, so rapid are the changes the Body undergoes, under the influence of this truly Wonderful Medicine, that

Every Day an Increase in Flesh and Weight is Seen and Felt.

THE GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER.

Every drop of the SARSAPARILLIAN RESOLVENT communicates through the blood, Sweat, Urine, and other fluids and juices of the system the vigor of life, for it repairs the wastes of the body with new and sound material. Scrofula, Syphilis, Consumption, Glandular disease, Ulcers in the throat, Mouth, Tumors, Nodes in the Glands and other parts of the system, Sore Eyes, Strumorous discharges from the Ears, and the worst forms of Skin diseases, Eruptions, Fever Sores, Scald Head, Ring Worm, Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Acne, Black Spots, Worms in the Flesh, Tumors, Cancers in the Womb, and all weakening and painful discharges, Night Sweats, Loss of Sperm and all wastes of the life principle, are within the curative range of this wonder of Modern Chemistry, and a few days' use will prove to any person using it for either of these forms of disease its potent power to cure them.

If the patient, daily becoming reduced by the wastes and decomposition that is continually progressing succeeds in arresting these wastes, and repairs the same with new material made from healthy blood—and this the SARSAPARILLIAN will and does secure—a cure is certain; for when once this remedy commences its work of purification, and succeeds in diminishing the loss of wastes, its repairs will be rapid, and every day the patient will feel himself growing better and stronger, the food digesting better, appetite improving, and flesh and weight increasing.

Not only does the Sarsaparillian Resolvent excel all known remedial agents in the cure of Chronic, Scrofulous, Constitutional, and Skin diseases; but it is the only positive cure for

The Sun.

NEW YORK, 1873-4. WEEKLY, SEMI-WEEKLY, AND DAILY.

THE WEEKLY SUN is too widely known to require any extended recommendation; but the reasons which have already given it fifty thousand subscribers, and which will, we hope, give it many thousands more, are briefly as follows:

It is a first-rate newspaper. All the news of the day will be found in it, condensed when unimportant, at full length when of moment, and always presented in a clear, intelligible, and interesting manner.

It is a first-rate family paper, full of entertaining and instructive reading of every kind, but containing nothing that can offend the most delicate and scrupulous taste.

It is a first-rate story paper. The best tales and romances of current literature are carefully selected and legibly printed in its pages.

It is a first-rate agricultural paper. The most fresh and instructive articles on agricultural topics regularly appear in this department.

It is an independent political paper, belonging to no party, and wearing no collar. It fights for principle, and for the election of the best men to office. It especially devotes its energies to the exposure of the great corruptions that now weaken and disgrace our country, and threaten to undermine republican institutions altogether. It has no fear of knaves, and asks no favors from their supporters.

It reports the fashions for the ladies, and the markets for the men, especially the cattle markets, to which it pays particular attention.

Finally, it is the cheapest paper published. One dollar a year will secure it for any subscriber. It is not necessary to get up a club in order to have THE WEEKLY SUN at this rate. Any one who sends a single dollar will get the paper for a year.

THE WEEKLY SUN.—Eight pages, fifty-six Columns. Only $1.00 a year, no discounts from this rate.

THE SEMI-WEEKLY SUN.—Same size as the Daily Sun, $2.00 a year. A discount of 20 per cent. to Clubs of 10 or over.

THE DAILY SUN.—A large four page newspaper of twenty-eight Columns. Daily Circulation over 120,000. All the news for 2 cents. Subscription price 50 cents a month, or $6 a year. To Clubs of 10 or over, a discount of 20 per cent.

The Auburn Courier

Thursday, Nov., 13, 1873.

The Democratic pyramid is beginning to loom up mightily since the Ohio election. The Radicals are beginning to see it.

Hon. S. S. Cox has been elected to Congress from the Sixth New York District. We are delighted to see our old friend returned to a field where his labor is made profitable to the whole country.

Count Chambord has utterly ruined his chances for the throne of France, by not only writing, but insisting on the publication of a letter, wherein he proclaims himself a dyed-in-the-wool Bourbon.

The Inter-Ocean with unwonted candor begins its editorial column today with: "We have met the enemy, and we are theirs." It would make an appropriate heading for a majority of the Republican papers throughout the land, at the present time.

Now the demand for reform on the part of the organs begins with the discharge of a few underpaid clerks in the Government offices—never a word to Oliver, et al., about that $625 a month which they draw twelve months in the year, for three months loitering at Washington.

We see by a special dispatch that if the Pennsylvania Central Railroad is not able to make its semi-annual dividends on the first of January it will cut off all the leased roads which fail to make their expenses. This is claimed to be their right under their lease.

There is a glimmer of a suspicion that a large body of the American people hold the Republican party responsible for the Salary Steal, and it seems that they are also not unmindful of the fact that there has been a disastrous panic while the finances of the country were in the keeping of the same party.

All good fathers will rejoice at the parental foresight of the Sprague folks, who, instead of leaving their offspring to the worldly chances of panics and bankruptcies, settled upon each infantile Sprague, as it arrived in the land, from a half to a whole million of dollars; so that now when the storms come and the financial winds howl, the youthful Spragues may manage to pull through on these rainy day titbits.

Chicago elects the "People's" Ticket over the "Citizens'" by about 6,000 majority. The Times doesn't seem to be seized and possessed of much influence in its own country—or anywhere else. Things have changed, too, since Medill received a majority of 11,000 votes. The leading issue in the election was the liquor question, and the Chicagoans appear to be predjudiced against prohibition.

One of the most extraordinary results of the late election is that such great manufacturing citizens as Lowell and Worcestor, in Massachutts, should cast their hundreds of majorities for the Democratic Governor. Heretofore the Democrats have had hardly an organization in them. It is evident that the manufacturing operatives, for some cause or other, are deserting the Republican or Administration party.

The severest blow that the Republican party has received, is their disastrous defeat in Wisconsin. For twenty years they have had absolute control of the State, and a uniform majority of twenty thousand. On last Tuesday the figures were reversed, and the Democratic and Liberal ticket elected by about that majority, and an opposition majority in both branches of the Legislature. It will be hard for our Radical friends to satisfactorily account for the result in Wisconsin.

Scribes on the inside in Washington declare that the tone of the members is uncompromisingly hostile to the repeal of the grab. With but two exceptions every member of Congress, both new and old, has drawn the increase of pay, $625 a month, and none of these speculators will be very much disposed to relinquish such easily earned treasures as this. Some of the Republican and Democratic members from the North mean to make a little capital for themselves by introducing bills of repeal, but the pressure for passage will be very weak and the solid vote of the South against it is expected to shield the Northern members.

That Tidal Wave!

AGAINST RADICALISM!

The Inter Ocean at Chicago says, we have met the enemy, and we are theirs.

The Fort Wayne Gazette says, the Republican party has met with a serious defeat in both the East and the West.

1. It warns Republicans that if they would retain control of the Government they must have some decided, vigorous and aggressive policy on the new questions of statesmanship which are gradually coming to the front and crowding aside the old questions grow out of the war, which, people in general begin to feel, are pretty thoroughly settled. These new questions pertain to finance, railroad and other monopolies, reform of the civil service, and retrenchment of government expenses in every department.

2. This defeat seems to us a positive rebuke of the Republican party for its disgraceful connection with Credit Mobilier swindles, land subsidies and back pay grabs.

The people have triumphed! Victory is theirs. It is not a Republican victory; but a victory of the people. It is the victory of the party opposed to corruption and monopelies over a party long in power, and the stench of whese corruption fills the whole air. The Republican party has long held sway in the West, but at last it is being thrust from power, and is now rapidly going down to merited oblivion. We rejoice with the poople, and take the field against the party of corruption and theiving

The people are aroused, and condemn by their ballots a President who sports away at Long Branch $50,000 a year of the people's money, and a Republican party whose leaders in Congress are guilty of the Credit Mobilier swindle, and the enactment of the "salary grabbing, back pay stealing" infamous law. The ball which began rolling in Ohio and Iowa is "marching on," and Illinois, Wisconsin, Michigan, Kansas and the eastern States, show by their vote that the people everywhere have risen against the Republican party, which has fastened upon them the evils of a corrupt personal administration, the plunder of the public domain, the robbery of the National Treasury the evil of class legislation, and a vicious monetary system. . . . It wiil not be long until those who agree on these principles will be united in a single organization, and be known by a common name. What that name shall be will be a matter of chance, but no sensible man will dispute about the name, provided only the principles are those which have been proven correct by time, and which commend themselves to the feelings of honest men, and to the necessities of the country.

"Buried" has ceased to be of any value to Republican papers as a heading. It did very well before the result of the Ohio election was known, but in the face of the result in that State and in fact, in every other State which has held elections this year, the application of it to the Democratic party is somewhat ludicrous. There is a time for everything under the sun, and the hour when the Radical party is to be hurled from power, is already at hand. In 1872, Massachusetts was "the Radical Camp of Roaring Luck," and in it a majority was rolled up for the Radical candidate for Governor—Washburn —of 74,264, while Grant swept the track with a majority of 74,212. But the back pay business, the Credit Mobilier scheme and other slight eccentricities of the Republican leaders have smote the camp with fear and trembling, so that, if this year they get a meagre majority vote of 10,000, they will do quite as well as the news thus far indicate. The people are tired of misrule and are bent on a change —a change which shall recall the old days of Democracy, statesmanship and honesty.

Prof. Bennett desires to teach a juvenile class the rudiments of music. Everyone should attend.

The Institute is largely attended. Look out for a lively interest in country schools this winter.

Mr. Acton, the genial agent of the Fort Wayne Gazette gave us a call on Tuesday. He reports that paper flourishing.

It is notable that lady's furs are going out of fashion and some kind of worsted toggery is to supply its place.

STOP A LEEDLE.—Mr. Beard the grocer, would be pleased to have you call as soon as possible and settle your account.—Don't forget.

Tom Taylor says that there is considerable indignation throughout the country because the government did not let Capt. Jack off. Tom knows how 'tis himself.

The Fort Wayne Journal has the fat job of advertising the proposals for carrying the mails next year for the Government. Dailies are only second class where Tom exists.

Judge James I Best, successor to Judge Tousley, assumes his duties as Circuit Judge of the District comprising the counties of Noble, DeKalb and Steuben, on the first of this month.

The present fashion with some folks hereabouts is to lay in a cargo of old rye on Saturday night, and keep as full as a tick all day Sunday, showing a high contempt for the new liquor law which is "totetally dis-wrong."

The Fort Wayne Gazette says, "Nothing is to be gained by any disguise of the fact that the Republican party suffered a severe defeat in the contest on Tuesday.' We doubt, however, whether the Press has fairness enough to admit that much.

Cold weather is at hand, and every one will need something warm and comfortable for their feet. A good boot is a desirable article to have. Go to E. Vordermark & Son's in the Odd Fellows' new building where they can be had cheap.

A new Brass Band has been organized at Newville, DeKalb county and they have commenced "tooting." The citizens say that the filing of all the Mill saws, and the blower of the Foundry is far preferable. They are under the leadership of Prof Hanna, of Antwerp.—Angola Republican.

S. J. Lock, of Waterloo, is making arrangements to open a nice lunch room at Butler. As all trains now stop at Butler, there is a prospect of this being the best point now in the county for an establishment of that kind and if anybody can make it run, Si is the man.

Abright & Shepherd have mooved their quarters to Ensly's block in the room next to Odd Fellows' building. They will soon be in good shape and then the public will see one of the finest stocks of Watches, Clocks, Jewelry, Silver-wear, Organs and Musical Instruments, ever on exhibition in the county. Look out for a fine display of holiday goods.

Singing Class.

A class in vocal music has been organized here under the tutorship of Prof. Bennett, and a lesson will be given each week until the course of twelve lesson is finished. The class will meet at Case's Hall next Saturday evening, and all wishing to join are requested to be present.—Tuition $150 for the term.

It is given out that the delegates from this county, who favored the endorsement of Greeley at the last democratic State convention, will wear sack-cloth, adorned with ashes, at the coming 8th of January meeting.—Press.

It is given out that the Radicals are now wearing sack-cloth, adorned with ashes, since the late news from the east and west on election.

Those popular butchers, Long & Houston are prepared to supply nice juicy roasts, the best of steaks, porter house, round and sirloin, boiling pieces, sausage and everything else appertaining to their line of business. Remember their place of business, one door east of bakery, Eight street.

We do not mean to flatter when we say that the address delivered before the Institute last Tuesday evening by W. L. Penfield, Esq., was most neat and appropiate, and well received. It was comprehensive, well delivered and possessed the merit of being not too long. It showed a depth of thought and familiarty with the subject, "Teacher's Mission,' that springs only from a well stored and cultivated mind.

A JOKE.—We understand that a few evenings since a very lively temperance meeting was held at Waterloo, at which the traffic was to be stopped at all events or blood would flow. The Hon. T. R. Dickinson was President and whilom friend of the Press, B. F. Kennedy, was the Secretary. A day or two afterwards it was ascertained that each of these officers had signed the petition of one or more men to retail liquor in the place. Since their names appear on file in the Auditor's office there has been no more temperance meetings at that place.

The present is a time of deep solicitude to the farmers of what will be the results of this season's labors, especially on account of our financial embarrassment.—The outlook before the panic was hopeful. We can only say at present that the foreign demand for our cereals will be good, and with money flowing in its usual channels, we may reosonably expect an increasing price that will fairly renumerate the producer. The hog crop will soon be ready for market, and indications are that the crop will be below the average. This, with a diminished corn crop, will tend to enhance the price, and farmers ought to realize a higher price than last year. The packers all made money last year, whilst the farmers generally hardly received the cost of production.

Do you owe the printer? If you do, says an exchange, you may worm a fence around a winter's supply of summer weather, skim the clouds from the sky with a teaspoon, catch a thunderbolt in a bladder, break a hurricane to a harness, lasso an avalanche, pin a diaper on the crater of an active volcano, hive all the stars in a nail keg, hang the ocean on a rail fence to dry, put the sky to soak in a gourd, unbuckle the belly band of eternity, and paste "To Let" on the sun and moon, but never—for a moment—delude yourself with the idea that you can escape that place on the other side of purgatory and get to heaven unless you pay the printer promptly.

Waterloo vs. Auburn.

MR. EDITOR:—In reply to "Impartial" I would say that he mistakes the tenor of my communication. Had he lived longer and had more experience, he would know better, but I overlook his verdancy. I do not seek to cast Waterloo in the shade on account of its only "hold," but contrary wish it God speed in its laudable undertaking of horse-racing. I stated only a fact, not wishing to beard the lion in its den. If it and its friends do not like facts told, they should not throw stones. Has not Auburn with open arms sought to receive it with sisterly love, and has it not as often refused? "Impartial" (if he can conceive the idea) ought to know that agricultural matters were esteemed in the following proportion, viz: All prizes in agricultural and farming pursuits were not quite equal to the fourth purse given for a colt that could not beat four minutes. If such was the case was it an agricultural fair or a regular horse race, and every officer of the great North Eastern Indiana Agricultural Fair, was either directly or indirectly interested?

JUSTICE.

The members of the Institute and our citizens generally were regaled with a fine recitation by Prof W N Hull, of Pittsburg at the M E Church last evening—The recitations consisted of pathetic and humorous poems the proper rendition of which required a practice as varied as it was difficult The Prof met each emergency with a versatility seldom equaled by our best elocutionists, and entertained his large audience to their utmost satisfaction Mr Hull has added largely to the interest of the present session of the Institute, and we cannot but approve of the excellent taste displayed in securing his services

FREE OF CHARGE.—Call at W. & E. T. Martin's Drug Store and get a sample bottle of Dr. A. Boschee's German Syrup, Free of Charge. It has lately been introduced in this country from Germany, and for any person suffering with a severe cough, heavy cold settled on the breast consumption or any disease of the throat and lungs it has no equal. Our regular size bottles 75 cents. In all cases money will be promptly returned if perfect satisfaction is not given. Two doses will relieve any case. Try it.

ON TO BUTLER.

The First Passenger Train.

OUR CITIZENS TAKE A FREE RIDE.

Last Monday it was first made known that those who subscribed stock to the Eel River road would be treated to a free ride to Butler, on the first passenger train due here at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.—Nobody ever dreamed before that the number of stockholders was so large as that [illegible] at the depot at the appointed time. Men who had grown grey in the service of discouraging almost every public enterprise that was proposed, men who never gave a cent toward building the road and thereby discouraged others from giving valuable assistance, men whose miserly instincts, made their cheeks as brass and permitted them to stand in among the generous, brave-harted, who had contributed so largely to the success of the road, men like these were there in all their glory, dressed for the occasion. We do not mean those who were willing but unable to subscribe, but we emphatically mean those who had the means but lacked that liberality that is so closely allied with honesty. These are the ones we mean and these are the ones that crowd meant as they were pointed out and remarked about. They were not on hand when a little money was need, but as soon as a free ride was made known they came out of their holes, and rejoiced not as the people did, that road had been built at last, but selfishly rejoiced that they were to be the recipients of a free ride. Shame on such cheek, such brazenness!

When the train arrived, promptly at 2 o'clock, three cars were added, and about 400 boarded them for Butler. Eastward the car of progress took its way, over a new route, a new line, and the heart of the beholder was made glad. No more stopping to make connections to reach Butler by rail, but a direct through line of our own, hurrah! Everybody felt happy going, and one or two were exceedingly happy on their return. When the train arrived Butler was out in force to meet us. and the Auburn Silver Band which accompaned the excursion, struck up the grand old chorus, "Auburn Greets Thee, Butler!" and the peal of music, and the shouts of greeting, and waving of flags that day in honor of the opening of the road will long be remembered, as a happy event in these days of panics and hard times.

An hour was spent in visiting about the place, examining the handsome new Depot, the Elevator and Round-house, and noticing the many evidences of improvement to be seen on every hand.—We just had a moment to see each one when the train backed out for the return. Of course we had to stop at Sheldon & Co.'s popular Drug Store. No one can visit Butler and be happy without giving these clever gentlemen a call. And there was Dr. Hoopingarner, just across the way in the same line, just as genial and accommodating. We stopped but a moment at the News office, the name of the new paper to appear next week, and found everything progressing favorably.

And so in the short space of two hours we paid a pleasant visit to our neighbor and returned in good order. Thanks to the Eel River Road.

The Engine was under the careful guidance of Eugene Eckley, as genial and clever a fellow as he is a thorough and competent engineer. Conductor Bechtel was in charge of the train and seems as successful in that line as hunting up boot and shoe and notion dealers. President Collins and Superintendent Southard accompanied the excursion.

Four inches of snow this morning and more coming. "O, the snow."

We like to see an assemblage of this kind good natured.—We think they catch the inspiration to a great extent, from the Superintendent, who is good nature and geniality personified. NEWS SUMMARY.

The East.

THE Beecher-Bowen-Tilton scandal is again stinking in the nostrils of the Brooklynites. Tilton has been summoned to appear before a committee of Plymouth church and tell what he knows about the matter, but refuses on the ground that he is not a member of that church....A number of New York firms have failed, including Lloyd, Hamilton & Co.; J. F. & W. H. Daley; C. Mattman, Schmid & Co.; and Hoyt, Sprague & Co. The latter are the agents of the Rhode Island Spragues, the extensive manufacturers, and their suspension is one of the gloomiest features of the panic, $3,000,000 of their acceptances being afloat in New York alone. The failure is also announced of Morgan, Young, Altemus & Co., one of the heaviest Philadelphia dry goods houses. The reports from the Eastern manufacturing districts do not lighten up the general situation. From every quarter comes the news of reduction of time and wages and discharge of operatives. Thousands are now out of employment in Massachusetts, Pennsylvania and New York. The Cranston and Franklin Savings Banks, of Providence, in which the Spragues are largely interested, have suspended. The deposits, amounting in the aggregate to $3,500,000, were made chiefly by working people, who will suffer great privations if they lose their savings. Twenty thousand working girls in Newark, N. J., have been thrown out of employment by the stopping of manufactories. Thirty-seven mills in Fall River are now running on half time. The Merrimac Woolen Mills, of Lowell, will close up in a few days. Over 25,000 working women are reported idle in Philadelphia. It is is evident that this will be a hard winter for the classes dependent on daily earnings....The Philadelphia Mint is now coining silver at the rate of $1,500,000 a month....Freehold, N. J., was recently visited by a destructive fire, over $150,000 worth of property being burned.

THERE has been another serious fall in stocks in Wall street. Northwestern common touched 30, the lowest price it ever sold for, being five cents lower than when Henry Keep picked it up, seven years ago. Vanderbilt shares suffered an alarming decline, and it is said the venerable cormorant was taxed to his utmost resources to keep his head above water. Western Union went down to 45⅞, New York Central to 80⅞, Lake Shore to 58⅞, and Union Pacific to 15....A New York dispatch states that the great dry goods house of H. B. Claflin & Co. is seriously embarrassed.

THE Chesapeake and Ohio railroad has defaulted on its interest....The reported failure of the great New York dry goods house of H B. Claflin & Co. was a canard. The firm is perfectly solvent....The committee of Providence bank representatives appointed to examine the condition of the affairs of the A. & W. Sprague Manufacturing Company report the assets of the corporation to be $19,495,247, and their liabilities $11,475,443. They recommend that the members of the firm mortgage all their property to three trustees, who shall have entire control of it until their affairs are settled, their obligations to run three years....One of the Stokes jurors is in trouble, being under arrest and indictment for disregarding the obligations of a juror....During the three months ending Sept. 30 there arrived at New York 68,588 emigrants, of whom 24,381 were Germans....Jay Cooke & Co. have again issued circulars to their creditors earnestly requesting their assent to the proposed agreement. One of their heaviest creditors says if the firm is forced into bankruptcy they cannot pay over 25 cents on the dollar, but if allowed to settle themselves they will pay every dollar, and have a nice sum left....The gold coinage at the United States Mint in October amounted to $11,010,000 in double eagles....The gold weighed 38 tons....The freight business of the Eastern railroads is suffering severely from the financial disturbance....Stokes has entered upon his four years' residence in Sing Sing Prison.

IT is believed that the Sprague Manufacturing Company will be able to discharge their obligations and continue business uninterruptedly if their creditors are not too pressing. ....Between $700,000 and $800,000 in silver of various denominations will be coined at the Philadelphia Mint this month....Steps have been taken for the formation in New York of a bank devoted entirely to the grain interests of the interior....That bale of cotton donated for the benefit of the Memphis sufferers has been again sold in New York for $2,875, or more than $6 a pound.... The consumers of beer in New York having for a long time complained of the quality of their favorite beverage, the brewers have resolved to raise the price from $9 to $10 per barrel, as they claim it is impossible to make good beer at the former price....The firm of H. B. Claflin & Co., of New York, has made a statement to its creditors, showing their assets of all kinds to amount to $22,508,000, and their indebtedness, both domestic and foreign, $15,584,000, leaving a surplus of $6,924,000, not counting the personal assets of the members of the firm. Upon this showing the creditors have unanimously agreed to grant an extension of four months on the monthly payments, and the business will go on as usual.

LOUIS GAYLORD CLARK, the well-known author and magazinist, and who was editor of the old Knickerbocker Magazine during its existence, died in New York last week, aged 63.

THE rumor that Tom Scott, the railroad king, had failed, is indignantly denied by that gentleman....The mother of the late Edwin M. Stanton is dead, aged 80....Nine fishermen were drowned from a sail-boat in the St. Lawrence river, on the 5th inst.....Harrisburg has been visted by a destructive fire. The State Journal office, with several other establishments, were burned. Total loss about $150,000....Gold in New York was down to 106⅞ last week—the lowest point since 1862.... Several large Boston dry goods houses are seriously embarrassed....Bankruptcy proceedings against Jay Cooke & Co. have been commenced in the Philadelphia courts.

The West.

SENATOR WINDOM'S Transportation Committee visited Louisville, the other day, and were received on 'Change, where resolutions were passed commendatory of the James River and Kanawha canal. The committee examined Capt. Adams and other engineers in regard to the Louisville canal, and seemed satisfied of the necessity of the improvement of the Ohio river, and Government control of the canal....Gov. Beveridge has succeeded in preventing the St. Louis roughs from having their prize-fight on Illinois soil, and Allen and Hogan propose to maul each other on Canada soil, near Detroit....The Wayne county, Ind., county-seat war is over, and order reigns once more....Mike McCoole, the St. Louis bruiser, is under arrest on a charge of murdering Patsy Manly, another pugilist, who was found dead, with a bullet in his heart, in front of McCoole's grog-shop....Nearly the entire business portion of Reno, Nev., has been burned. Loss, $100,000.

SIXTEEN foreign life insurance agencies are in trouble in Dubuque, Iowa, for conducting their business contrary to the provisions of the laws of the State. Suits have been brought against them, aggregating a penalty of $217,000....The Chicago stock-yards are full to overflowing with live stock, without any immediate prospect of relief by shipments to the East. In view of this state of affairs, the Chicago papers advise Western dealers to restrict their shipments to that city for the present....James E. Tyler, a wealthy Chicago real estate dealer, has failed for $700,000. His estate is worth double that sum, and the creditors will lose nothing....A serious railroad collision occurred near Cedar Rapids, Iowa, on the 30th ult., which resulted in the death of John B. Watkins, the Superintendent of the Iowa Division of the Chicago and Northwestern railroad, who was crushed between two cars. The President, General Manager, General Superintendent and Chief Engineer, as well as other officials of the road, were also on the train, but escaped injury.... General.

REPORTS from a very considerable portion of the country, relative to the crops, indicate, as compared with last year, a loss of 26 per cent. in corn, a gain of 6½ per cent. in wheat, a loss of 9 per cent. in oats, 7 per cent. in hay, and 4½ per cent. in the pork product. There is, however, a very considerable increase in the planted acreage of winter wheat....The Director of the United States Mint at Philadelphia has written a letter explaining the policy of the Government in issuing silver coin. He says the proceeding is profitable to the Government at the present prices of gold and silver, and that it is not a scheme for the resumption of specie payment, but simply a compliance with the mint laws..... Tom Scott has returned from Europe, and has been interviewed. He states that he had succeeded in negotiating bonds of the Pennsylvania Central Company in the sum of $10,000,000 before the outbreak of the panic. He was less successful with the securities of the Texas Pacific, but raised enough money to continue the work on the road. He says that the panic has substantially stopped the sale of American railroad securities; but predicts that the stoppage will be only temporary.

IT is altogether a new feature that workingmen should go from this country to Europe in search of employment; but it is positively stated that 300 mechanics in Paterson, N. J., have bought tickets for this purpose.

No little excitement was created in the Canadian Parliament at Ottawa, the other day, by the revelations of a member of the Opposition party, who rose in his seat and stated that an agent of the Ministry had offered him a bribe of $5,000 and a first-class official position if he would support the Government.

THE California and Texas Construction Company, which has the contract for building the Texas Pacific road from the western boundary of Texas to San Diego, Cal., having failed to meet its obligations, $900,000 of its paper went to protest at Philadelphia the other day. The total liabilities of the road are about $7,000,000. The Texas Pacific is one of the Tom Scott roads.

The St. Louis Times prints a letter from Chihuahua in corroboration of the main points of the statement made by the Times some time ago concerning a project to conquer and annex the Northern States of Mexico to the United States, by forming into an army the laborers on Tom Scott's Texas Pacific railroad when discharged on the completion of that work. The letter further states that the belief in this project has become general, and has unsettled feeling in Chihuahua; that the agents of Scott and his associates have been traversing that State in every direction during [illegible]

When the cars were pulled apart, which was four hours after the collision had taken place, his body was found to be nearly cut in two, and his legs and thighs hanging by shreds of skin from the trunk of the body. Mr. Keep also had a very narrow escape. He followed Mr. Watkins on the platform, and was thrown with great force through the door of the Pullman car, receiving many slight wounds on different parts of the body. Mr. Hughitt and the rest of the party in the director's car also had very narrow escapes.

Gen. Longstreet Said to be Organizing an Expedition Against Cuba, Backed by the President.

[New Orleans Cor. Louisville Courier.]

It is currently reported and believed by many well-informed parties that Longstreet is now actively eng ged in organizing an expedition for a descent upon Cuba, and that he is doing it with the knowledge and countenance, if not the actual assistance, of Grant. The acquisition of Cuba has always been a favorite hope, not only with the political leaders in Louisiana, but many even of the most prominent and wealthiest business men have indulged it. When Lopez undertook his expedition, a stock company, in aid of the enterprise, was organized, of which very many such men were members, and subscribed liberally. They constituted the junta or council, wherein were debated and decided all matters pertaining, not alone to the conduct of the campaign, but to the subsequent policy to be adopted, provided the expedition was successful. The expeditionary force was recruited and organized under the direction and control of this council. The officers were appointed by it, and it was, in all respects, invested with supreme authority. These parties doubtless expected to reap a rich reward in the event of success. They would have claimed all the offices of "trust and emolument" in the new reconstructed Cuba, and it is fair to presume that they anticipated a profitable return in kind upon their outlay of capital. Similar aid was afforded the other expeditions which have been projected. The members of the Lopez junta would not, perhaps, feel inducements so potent to exert themselves in behalf of Cuban independence and annexation now as they did then. The abolition of slavery would strip the scheme of the features which formerly recommended it most strongly to them. Nor have they now so much spare cash for tempting, but exceedingly doubtful, investments, as this one certainly is, as in the good old ante-bellum times. There are plenty of bold Yankee speculators, however, who may think it a good thing, and the President himself, with his judicious eye to location and talent in the real estate line, may find some eligible spot there as well worth gobblement as Samana bay.

Curious Discovery in the Archives of the Bank of England.

It is not generally known that under the provisions of its ancient charter the Governor and the corporation of the Bank of England are obliged not only to purchase at their fair value any precious metals tendered to them, but also to take charge of any gold or silver, in ingots or plate, that may be brought to them for safe-keeping. From time to time plate chests have been deposited with this view in the vaults of the bank, and many of them have been there so long that they are actually rotting away. On a recent occasion the servants of the bank discovered a chest, which, on being moved, literally fell to pieces. On examining the contents a quantity of massive plate was discovered of the period of Charles I. This circumstance might not in itself be very interesting, but that there was found with the plate a parcel, which proved to be a bundle of old love-letters, carefully arranged according to their dates. An inspection of them revealed a correspondence of a tender and romantic description, carried on during the period of the Restoration. The name of the writer was found to be Berners, and after considerable search among the archives of the institution, it was found that a family of that name had been connected with the bank about the time in question. Acting upon this clue the directors prosecuted their inquiry, and being satisfied that a gentleman of the same name, now living, is the lineal representative of the owner of the plate and the love-letters, both have been handed to him. The plate has been sent to Messrs. Lambert, the celebrated silversmiths of Coventry street, London, to be cleaned, and the newly-discovered owner has permitted it to be shown to any one interested in plate of the period. The love-letters are not, however, on view.—Court Journal.

Mirage of the Moon.

The Toledo (Ohio) Commercial relates the following extraordinary phenomenon:

A sight very rarely seen was witnessed from this city yesterday forenoon, Oct. 10. The morning was one of the brightest sunlight, with a sky remarkably clear. About 9:30 our attention was called to what at first sight was taken for the moon, the only thing appearing remarkable being its unusual brightness in the presence of such clear sunlight. The appearance was in a northwesterly direction, and at an angle of 45 degrees from the horizon. A second thought, however, showed that the moon had set about two hours previous, and, of course, was then far below the horizon.

The mystery was at once solved by the reflection that what was seen was simply a looming or mirage of the moon. Such phenomena in the case of shipping and other objects in connection with larger bodies of water and extensive plains are frequently seen; but we never before heard of this kind. Occurring, as it did, over the land, and some distance from the lake, makes it the more remarkable. The moon was near its last quarter, and its lines were most distinctly drawn, though upon careful examination something like a tremulousness could be observed.

The explanation of the mystery is familiar with all students in astronomy and atmospheric phenomena. It was an optical illusion, due to unequal densities and refracting powers of adjacent strata in the air. Sometimes the operation is simply a refraction or bending of the rays of light in their passage from one strata to another; while at others, the angle and relation of strata being favorable, there is a perfect reflection, as from a mirror. In the present case it had more the appearance of a reflection. This phenomenon is oftner observed in the morning, for the reason that the atmosphere near the surface of the water or the land retains its heat through the night, and hence is rarer than the strata above. Thus rays of light, as in this case of the moon, is passing from the rarer to the denser medium are refracted or reflected, according to the inclination of the angle and the relative densities of the strata.

Many curious cases of mirage are recorded. Capt. Scoresby, in 1822, saw the ship Fame at a distance of seventeen miles beyond the visible horizon of the observer. In 1806 the whole of Dover was seen at Ramsgate, England, though ordinarily only the tops of the highest spires were in sight. From Sandusky, Ohio, the islands and shipping on the lake have frequently loomed up ten to fifteen degrees above the horizon of the observer; while the Canada shore could be seen with a glass. Travelers on the plains of the West have observed like phenomena. But the presentation of the moon, as in the present case, has not before been known to us. At all events, it was a remarkable and highly interesting phenomenon.

Prayer Cures.

At the weekly meeting of the Methodist preachers at Wesleyan Hall this forenoon, the efficacy of prayer was referred to in connection with the late reported "miracle" at Piermont, N. H. The Rev. G. W. F. Clark said he was personally acquainted with Mrs. Sherman, on whom the "miracle" was performed, and had no doubt that the reports published in the secular papers of the day were true. The Rev. Joshua Gill said he was personally acquainted with the Rev. Mr. Sherman and his wife, who were devoted Christians. He fully indorsed the statements which had been published. The venerable Father Merrill spoke at some length on special answers to prayer. He related two wonderful instances in which the power and efficacy of prayer were shown. In one case a lady who was afflicted with a lameness in one limb was cured after praying with friends for a number of hours; in the other a lady who had been an invalid for a number of years was entirely cured, and went about the house singing praises.—Boston Herald.

PROFITABLE RESULT OF THE PANIC.—Panics bring profitable grists to the mill of many beside lawyers. "Cable investments," the London Financier says, "have this satisfactory peculiarity—that events which prove disastrous to other undertakings bring nothing but benefit to them." This is illustrated by a statement that the traffic receipts of the Atlantic cables reached $15,000 (in gold) per day on Friday and Saturday, the 19th and 20th of September, and that the average for that month, including Sundays, has been about $10,000 per day, or $3,650,000 per annum.

THE Wisconsin Methodist Conference has just concluded the trial of Presiding Elder White, of that State, on a charge of having imposed upon clergymen in that State by inducing them to purchase stock in a California mining company that turned out to be worthless. The verdict is, that he "is guilty of immoral conduct, with palliating circumstances, and that he be suspended from all ministerial duties for one year." The Elder appeals from the decision, and the case will come on for trial before the Judiciary Committee of the Church in December.

Fashion Notes.

THE "belt and buckle" mania is on the wane.

IN Paris wristlets of antiquated lace are fashionable.

ELIZABETHAN ruffs of black silk lined with pink satin are new.

NECK-HANDKERCHIEFS fashionable in 1777 are revived this season.

THE newest walking suits are shorter and scantier than heretofore.

IT doesn't matter much whether your new bonnet has strings or not.

BLACK cloth sacques, heavily braided, are comfortable and fashionable.

FLOWERS in the rim of bonnets, instead of face trimming, is the rule.

A SORT of modified or dwarf stove-pipe hat is worn by some of the belles.

ALL hats must turn up on the left side. If they don't, be sure to pin 'em.

WICKED people say many of the parlor mantel ornaments are used on the new bonnets.

BLACK velvet sashes are always serviceable, and no daughter in the family should be without one.

PANIERS have had their day and are seldom worn. The same may be said with truth of hoop skirts.

A FAVORITE style of trimming dresses is of two or three shades of the color of the material of which the costume is made.

SIX and eight button kid gloves, extending up the arm as far as the elbow, will continue the fashion for full dress.

HIGH combs after the Spanish style are much worn. The new style of wearing the hair makes the combs ornamental.

THE ladies appear to have taken the front breadths out of their overskirts and sewed them on the same garment behind.

LONG trained skirts of black silk, cut in battlement pattern around the button and bound with black velvet, are very stylish.

STEEL ornaments, such as stars, darts, arrows, etc., are called into requisition in connection with bonnet building.

DIAMOND powder for the hair was found so injurious to the eyes and hair that few ladies in society have the courage to use it.

SOME of the new jewelry is very pretty. Simple lobe ear-rings—the plainer the better—are the fashion. Contractors' wives and daughters have just now the monopoly of diamonds.

SMALL muffs suspended from around the neck with a cord or ribbon, will be fashionable next winter among the belles. Our grandmamas and maiden aunts will air, as usual, their fac-similes in fur or base drums.

Pennsylvania Barns.

Mr. W. A. Croffut, editor of the Minneapolis Tribune, one of the spiciest, wittiest, and most practical writers in the West, has been taking a stroll East, and thus discourses of the barns he he saw there:

"May I jump from the foot-lights to the farm?—from Chicago to Pennsylvania? In Chester and Lancaster counties is, I think, the most finished farming in the Union. The farms, composed of a brickdust sort of soil, are cultivated from fence to fence, every rood, as the farm of Flemings and Brittany are cultivated from hedge to hedge. Cattle stand with their four feet in two feet of clover. Every barn is a cow-palace. Every pig-pen is a porcine paradise. Pennsylvania is pre-eminently the State of barns. Think of a three-story stone barn, with a swell front and dormer windows in the roof, and a portico where the Sybaritic calves chew the cud of sweet contentment on summer evenings! And then behold the little cabin in the rear, where the agricultural Dutchman lives with his "frow," and where the children lie on the floor and envy the happy calves in the lattice portico. Every barn is three times as large as the house, which serves as a sort of an appendage, and, as it were, plays second fiddle to it. The barn is headquarters, and the house a sort of sentry-box where the man resides who takes care of it. The barn is slated, painted, corniced, cisterned, lightning-roded, and the pig-sty is glazed, the chicken coops are painted, and the worm-fences are whitewashed as far as the eye can see. I have no doubt the original dwellers here whitewashed the acres around the domicile twice or thrice a year, till they learned its fatality.

I do not know the effect upon cattle of so much petting. I should think it would tend to make the animals aristocratic, yet I do not know of any place where the cattle are more stuck up than in the West. There, you know, we have no barns to speak of. There are townships enough in Minnesota where everything with horns has the same chance to fight for the warm side of a haystack in January, and, it must be admitted, the weaker animals are considerably humpbacked and subdued in their feelings by April. Moreover, here the farmers use fertilizers, but in Minnesota we have an idea that the earth is an orange to be sucked, a sponge to be squeezed, a reservoir to be everlastingly drawn from without in the least diminishing its flow. All through the central West they are learning what Minnesota has yet to learn, that 'nature's wheat restorer,' to which the poet so touchingly alludes, is not balmy sleep, but manure."

THE great natural product at present flourishing in England, to judge from the London papers, is Mother Savage, of Blackburn, who, at the age of 84, has walked nine miles in a little over three hours. But how paltry are even the greatest products of Britain as compared with those of our own, our native land? In Virginia, poor old Virginia, a single county, which doesn't boast of it either, has produced a feminine antiquity, Mary Brown by name, who also in her eighty-fourth year, has blossomed forth, so to speak, and the result thereof is a bouncing boy, now six weeks old. Compared with Mary, what is England's old woman pedestrian? what, indeed, but an antediluvian fraud?

FARM AND GARDEN.

THE carpet-worm is a new pest just discovered. It is of dark color, less than half an inch in length, and covered with fine hair. It makes havoc with carpets in a short time. It is said that fine salt and fine cedar chips sprinkled on the edges of carpets will protect them from its ravages.

TO RESTORE COLOR.—When a color on a fabric has been accidentally or otherwise destroyed by acid, ammonia is applied to neutralize the same, after which an application of chloroform will, in almost all cases, restore the original color. The application of ammonia is common, but that of chloroform is little known.

TO REMOVE MILDEW.—Take a handful of salt and half a cup of soft-soap, rub on the cloth, expose to the sun and it will come out after one or two bleachings; or, wet the stained part well with soft-soap, then rub chalk over it thoroughly, and wet the cloth and expose to the sun, repeating the process until the stains disappear.

PRESERVED fruits often either ferment, mold, or candy, unless they are placed in air-tight cans, and these are not always within reach of the housewife. Now these three effects are produced by three separate causes—they ferment because they were not boiled enough; they mold from being kept in a damp place; they candy from being boiled too long. If papers dipped in whisky or alcohol are laid directly over preserves and jellies, it will often prevent them from spoiling. Preserves should be kept in a dark but dry place, and in arranging them on the shelves of a store-closet they should not come in contact with the plastering.

MAKING FAT PERSONS LEAN.—Drink only water, or, for a change, water with a little vinegar; no beer, or any malt liquors, no wine, soup, broth, milk, and especially no sugar or starchy preparations; no fine flour, no fat meat, no butter, no cheese, no sweetmeats. Now we expect you will ask, what is left then to eat? We answer, plenty of fresh fruit and green vegetables, especially salads, bread of unbolted flour without yeast, and no animal food except lean meat, smoked beef, tongue, etc. As carnivorous animals are never fat, it proves that starchy food is the main enemy to be avoided.

AN INCH A YEAR.—A Minnesota farmer gives, in the St. Paul Pioneer, his experience with plowing a field for wheat one inch deeper every year. The first year he plowed the land four inches deep and harvested seven bushels of wheat to the acre. The next season he plowed one inch deeper and took off 20 bushels per acre. Continuing to plow one inch deeper the next year, he harvested thirty-one and a half bushels. He says, in conclusion: "Last fall I did not go down for the extra inch. I feared if I kept on until I got down fifteen or twenty inches the straw would grow eighteen or twenty feet high, and that won't stand the storms of Minnesota; but if we want long straw and heavy wheat, we must plow deep. One inch deeper each year is plenty, and if this rule is followed strictly, our farms will be in good condition one hundred years to come.

NEED OF SECRECY.—The Pacific Rural Press remarks that the secret feature of the Patrons has thus far proven most beneficial, and is the only device of which we can conceive, by which the farmers in most localities can free themselves from the disturbing and disorganizing influences of either open or secret enemies. Many who have heretofore been conscientiously opposed to all secrets societies, have been induced to come into this as a last resort, and have since become fully satisfied that we must meet strategy by strategy—that we must conceal our plans of operation from those who are lying in wait to rob us, if we would effectively thwart the schemes of our wily adversaries.

COST OF RAISING WHEAT.—An enterprising farmer in one of the best wheat-growing neighborhoods in Madison county, Ill., in a recent address before the Farmers' Club Association, in that county, made the following interesting statement: "The average price for wheat, corn, and hay, for twenty-two years, in St. Louis, has been for wheat, $1.28; corn, 63 cents; and for hay $19.86 per ton." In making an estimate on the profits of wheat culture, he estimated at $60 per acre, of which the average yield of wheat was 15 bushels, corn 45, oats 40, and of hay 1½ tons to the acre. Interest, 5 per cent.; or $3.80 per acre, taxes about 50 cents per acre; interest on wear and tear of machinery, 20 per cent. on first cost, which is about 70 cents per acre for reaper and mower, 40 cents for drill, and 5 cents per acre for the plow, etc.

Plowing, 20 days, $1.90 per day	$38.00
Harrowing 4 days, $2.10 per day	8.40
Rolling 4 days, $2.10 per day	8.40
Seed, 25 bushels, at $1.50 per bushel	37.50
Interest on seed 10 months at 10 per cent	3.15
Seeding and use of drill 1¼ days	10.70
Rent, 20 acres, at $3.60 per acre	72.00
Taxes	10.00
Harvesting, 2 days	25.00
Stacking, 4 men, 2 days	20.45
Thrashing	38.05
Total	$299.25

Or, 99¾ cents per bushel.

CRIBBING CORN.—The Journal of the Farm says: Many a sore-fingered husker has wished that his load of corn could be shoveled direct from the wagon into the crib, without having to throw out a portion by hand until the shovel could reach the bottom of the wagon. In loading corn take out a piece of pine board six feet long and a little wider than your shovel; place an end on the tail-board close to one corner of the wagon; and the other on the bottom end; fill up as usual. In unloading, shovel down the board to the bottom of the wagon, and not an ear need be touched by the hands.

This estimate undoubtedly approximates very closely to the actual cost of the production of wheat in the older settled sections of the country. Estimates on raw prairie, or the second year from the sod, might show a still more profitable result. He says it must be borne in mind that the above figure pay for the payment of taxes, and fair interest on money invested, so that what is obtained in price above the actual cost is actual profit. We shall be pleased to have our readers imitate the above example in estimating the actual cost of production. To this it would be well to add the yearly increase in the market value of the land.

The Coming City.

A few days ago the Governor of the State of New Jersey, in an address of welcome to a New York regiment of the National Guard, predicted that in fifty or seventy-five years from that time the greatest city on the continent would be on the west side of the Hudson, in the vicinity of where they then stood. Doubtless the boys from New York regarded this as a little innocent "Jersey" boasting, but those who knew Gov. Parker better paid more respect to the utterance. The almost marvelous increase in the population of all the New Jersey towns within a radius of sixteen or seventeen miles from Taylor's Hotel, in New York city, during the latest decade, the concentration of the great freight lines of the West on the Jersey City water-front, and the tendency of ocean commerce to meet this railroad focus, where the products of the continent can be transhipped from freight trains into the holds of ocean steamers, and vice versa for another continent, are facts well-known to every one. Gov. Parker is by no means the only careful observer who has predicted that unless a great change takes place the natural result of all this will be to build up an immense commercial city on the New Jersey side of the Hudson river and the retrogradation of New York from her position as commercial center. Indeed, the plan of the new city is already being laid out, and during the coming winter a strong effort will be made to get a bill passed by the New Jersey Legislature establishing its boundaries. It is proposed to incorporate all the cities and towns from and including Rahway on the south, and Patterson on the north, into one municipality. The district to be embraced is ten times as large as Manhattan Island, and includes Jersey City, Newark, Elizabeth, Rahway, Elizabethport, Bayonne, Greenville, Hoboken, Seacaucus, Orange, Rutherfurd Park, Passaic, and Patterson, besides all the villages and townships embraced within the line, which is to be drawn from Rahway to Paterson, thence easterly to the Hudson river so as to include Hackensack and Englewood, thence following the shore of the Hudson river and New York bay down to the Kill von Kull, thence to the westerly shore of Staten Island Sound, and thence as far as the mouth of the river, which leads up to Rahway again. The present population included in this district is about 400,000.—New York World.

Yellow Fever at Calvert, Texas.

The death of Dr. W. B. Field was not unexpected by the deceased. When the plague came, he pronounced it yellow fever. He continued at the post of duty until attacked and prostrated. He then became resigned to his fate. Relief came too late. It was a natural impossibility, he said, for him to recover. To the last he retained his senses, and sent for his brother Scott. He did not dread death, but gave up life unmurmuringly, having sacrificed it in the service of his fellow-man. His was the last funeral in Calvert. Max Brennan, the foreman of Hook and Ladder Company No. 1, with eight other members of the company, of which deceased was an active member, decorated the company truck, and laid upon it all that was mortal of Dr. Field. The mournful procession marched to the graveyard, drawing the truck. On their way they were stopped by a colored man, who rushed out of a house occupied by Mr. Brooks, a photographer, and his wife, asking them to stop and come in, as the face of a white man had not been seen there for a week. They halted, and some of them entered. The sight that met their gaze was enough to strike terror into stout hearts. Lying dead upon a bed, covered with black vomit, was Mr. Brooks, His wife, delirious with yellow fever, was wildly screaming, unconscious of her husband's death. Such assistance as could be rendered was freely and promptly given. As there were no sheets in the house, some plain white cambric was purchased in a neighboring store. The party then resumed their march, bowed down by the surrounding horrors, and reached the graveyard, where they interred their late friend and companion, the beautiful service of the Episcopal Church being read over him by Mr. T. P. Terrell. They left and separated to continue their work of waiting upon the sick. This, however, was the last attempt at anything approaching display in interring the dead at Calvert.—Houston Mercury.

Life in Greenland.

[Cor. of the New York Tribune.]

The climate of Greenland is considered by the Danes as very healthy, and the natives seldom die of any other disease than consumption, which is very prevalent among the Esquimaux, and is no doubt contracted through their careless habits. The hut is a simple building of stone (boarded up on the inside), with a layer of turf on the outside, and a long, low tunnel entrance, about 10 or 15 feet in length, opening to the south. This hut is about 12 feet square and 6 feet high, with two windows in the side which are blocked up with turf during the winter, so as to keep the cold out. This room is generally supplied with a stove, in which peat is burned, for they have no other kind of fuel. There is always in these huts a close, depressing atmosphere, while outside, especially on a foggy day, the atmosphere is cold. These people sit in the house sewing, etc., with their heavy seal skin clothing on, and will run in and out of doors, make visits, and attend their dances, without making any addition to their clothing, or reducing it when they return to their homes. Then a family of six or eight sleep in this same room, on a platform which serves as a bed, lying very close together, and breathing the same atmosphere over and over again.

THE French being convinced that their failure in the late war was in a great measure due to the inferiority of their muzzle-loading field guns, are now disposed to discard all cannon of that class and adopt breech-loaders exclusively.

PATRONS OF HUSBANDRY.

The Position and Purposes of the Great Agricultural Order—Why Farmers Should Interest Themselves Personally in Politics.

[Extract from the Address of Gov. Booth Before the State Grange of California.]

The organization of the farmers of the United States into one "guild," if permanently carried forward in the spirit of its inception, will lead to consequences of the highest importance. I understand that, while a portion of the work of the Patrons of Husbandry, like that of the Masons, Odd-Fellows, and other similar fraternities, is secret, while it has certain degrees, orders, honorary titles and decorations, these are mere incidents to its general objects—that it means business, not show—that its substantial design is to improve the material interests, the mental and moral character and social privileges of the members of the largest and most important industrial interest of our country. How far and in what way this design shall be accomplished will depend upon the intelligent efforts and patient co-operation of the members themselves.

There may come a time when all the observances and ceremonies with which societies of this kind hedge themselves in, and the forms and symbols with which they endeavor to make their proceedings attractive, will be banished by that severe taste which loves to contemplate truth as a pure abstraction. But that time is very distant, and the millenium will tread close upon its coming. Some of the critics who are wont to sneer at the official titles and degrees conferred by the "granges" would be giddy with delighted vanity if the meanest and most profligate monarch who ever sat upon a throne salute them as "Sir Knight."

While the soldier follows his flag with inspiration of courage, and will lead a forlorn hope for the sake of a ribbon; while the parade is bright with the glory of gold lace; while the church has its stained windows, its organs and choirs; ministers their gowns and bands and surplice; while every state occasion of event has its prescribed ceremony; while colleges and universities annually pepper us with A. M's., D. D's. and LL. D's., while everybody who is a member of the civil government is "Hon." and everybody who is not is "Col.," or "Esq.," why should not industry, too, have its colors, and holding its patent from nature, confer its titles and degrees? Why is not the "Knight of the Plow" as honorable a title as the "Knight of the Garter?" or why may not the decoration of "The Horse" be worn as proudly as that of the "Elephant" of Denmark, or "Black Eagle" of Prussia? Since from the constitution of our nature the forms and shows of time are part of man's life upon the earth, we need not reject these which are images of peace, the coinage of civilization, while clinging to others which are emblems of war or relics of barbarism.

Whoever has studied the growth of our population must have observed an increasing tendency toward concentration in towns and cities, and that in the large cities—centers of capital, commerce and manufactures—the increase is in greater ratio than in the smaller, which depends upon the local trade for support. It is noticeable, too, that cities where population and capital are concentrated have year by year a greater relative influence in shaping the general policy of government. In them public opinion is massed, and can be thrown immediately upon any given point. They support the great newspapers, attract the leading men and surplus capital. The great moneyed interests and schemes which have in cities their centers are never without special and plausible advocates. They organize lobbies, and have agents and attorneys before every important legislative and Congressional committee. Their influence is thus felt directly and specifically at the time and place where it is wanted. To illustrate: No capital of the same amount in this country, perhaps none in the world, has in the same time averaged as large profits upon the investment as that of the national banks. The security for their bills is Government bonds, on which the banks receive interest. The medium with which they redeem is Government notes. The number of banks is limited, so that they have a monopoly of the privileges they enjoy.

It is probable that, but for the influence of the banks themselves and the public opinion they have been able to create, the Government, handling, as it does annually, from one hundred and fifty to two hundred millions in gold, and collecting and disburcing in gold and currency every year in amount equal to more than half the entire circulating medium required by the business of the country, with a credit based upon a continent, and supported by the patriotism and interest of the whole population, would long have furnished the currency direct, making the profit on circulation a common benefit, and have made its exchangeable value equal to gold. The people themselves are entitled to whatever profit there is from the circulation of bills or money, which could have no value but for the credit given by them, and for whose redemption their own bonds are pledged. The problem is not a difficult one, but its practical solution has never been earnestly attempted. If any banking house enjoyed the credit, commanded the resources, and handled the money the Government does, it would find no difficulty in making its bills of par value with gold. Whenever any financial policy is proposed it is "Wall street" that is heard, First, because Wall street, having a special interest, will speak; second, because we are apt to concede that Wall street, having made this subject a specialty, has a right to determine. In truth, the Wall street interests should bear about the same relation to the industrial pursuits of the country that the hands on the dial do to the machinery of a watch. If the mainspring and wheels are right, you can easily adjust the hands to register the movement.

Our tariff represents no general principle or policy either of "protection," "incidental protection," or "revenue only," but is a patchwork clearly disclosing just how far each special interest seeking protection was able to make itself heard.

If there is any principle of governmental policy upon which all party platforms and public speakers, candidates, office-holders and newspapers agree, it is that the public lands should be held for actual settlers. If the sentiment could be put to a viva voce vote, one universal "Aye!" would go up from sea to sea.

But we have had land-bounties to soldiers for military services, land-scrip to agricultural colleges for educational purposes, land-scrip for the extinguishment of Indian titles, swamp-lands to States for reclamation purposes, land-grants to railroads—and somehow these do pass into the hands of speculators, for the most part, and the chorus of that very musical motto in American politics, "Homes for the homeless," dies away on the ear.

I instance these illustrations not to find fault, but to show how much and now naturally legislation is influenced and directly by the immediate interest which presses its claims at time, place and occasion. One positive will effect more than an army of neutrals. One man who knows what he wants, and seeks it, will accomplish more than a hundred who don't want him to get it, but who resolutely stay at home and say nothing about it until it is too late, and then indulge in the luxury of grumbling.

What we desire and hope for from the granges upon this subject is that they will give shape, consistency and definitiveness to that diffusive public opinion which now, unorganized, is heard rather in criticism than direction, and that law-makers and public men shall realize at least that there is a reserve force which, though slow of speech, will speak, and when private and special interests are clamorous it is safe to wait until those general interests can be considered which are often the first to suffer and the last to be heard.

One subject will doubtless be soon presented for legislation of the greatest importance to a large body of the farmers of this State, and on which they ought to be heard—that of irrigation.

Another question in connection with this subject will be the practibility of using the canals for purposes of irrigation or transportation.

It is of the highest importance that at the outset the State should adopt the best system, and too much care cannot be given to the arrangement of its details. The report of the commission of engineeers appointed by the General Government to make a reconnoissance of the State will doubtless furnish facts of great value in arriving at a correct conclusion. I trust the farmers, who are most interested, will give the matter their patient, careful and intelligent attention, so that we shall have the benefit of full discussion and free interchange of opinion. I instance this as a striking case; but if the granges shall succeed in giving the affairs of local government that consequence and attention to which they are entitled, they will do an incalculable good.

We seem, as a people, to have a quadrennial attack of insanity over a Presidential election. How we do "save the country" with speeches and processions, and the burning of tar and turpentine, the blaze of Roman candles and sky-rockets, and the explosion of gunpowder. Distant be the day when the election of a President of the United States shall not be considered a matter of grave importance. That is the occasion when a sense of the unity of our country is made most vidid and real to us all. But the election of Supervisors, School Directors and local officers are often of more immediate concern to our individual well-being. Good roads, schools, correct administration of justice in affairs of daily life, taxes imposed only for common benefit and correctly expended, are things that touch us where we live—are real every day. Local officers, too, who are amenable to the criticism of their neighbors, should have the benefit of their intelligent and friendly counsel, so that local administration shall be directed as far as possible by the common neighborhood sentiment of what is right. There is a homely proverb, "Take care of the pennies and the pounds will take care of themselves." If the local affairs of our country are wisely administered the general administration will not be far wrong. Indeed, government is a growth from within, and the true character of any government depends upon the local institutions of the country, and these in last resort upon the average character of the people themselves. France finds that exterior changes in government are ephemeral, often only changes of name, because local institutions and interior administrations remain the same. These are the springs and wheels, and the clock strikes the hour wherever the hands may point. If by constant attention in each neighborhood we can succeed in getting our public schools as nearly perfect as possible, we shall take a bond of fate for the security of free institutions. Emerson says our New England ancestors discovered that the pomps and shows of royalty, with horse-guards and foot-guards, big wigs and little wigs, knights of the bed-chamber, etc., were unnecessary. Perhaps they were too poor to afford them. "Selectmen" would answer the purpose and were cheaper; hence the democratic principle and the representative republican government. We must keep the sources pure if we would have the stream clear, and not allow republican shows to destroy republican simplicity.

The Best Disinfectant.

Carbolic acid, in some of the various forms in which it is offered to the public, is one of the most popular disinfectants, and deservedly so. For simple disinfection, where the cause has been removed, nothing is superior to the acid itself, either concentrated or in solution. For disinfecting the air of a sick-room a few drops may be put upon a hot shovel or a stove-lid, or any article that will retain its heat for some time. It has the advantage that it does not injure clothing or metal articles with which the vapor comes in contrct. It should be used with care, however, as the liquid itself is a violent poison, even in small doses.

A BIT of red pepper, size of your finger-end, dropped into boiling meat or vegetables will kill all unpleasant odor. Remember this with boiled cabbage.

PAYING OUT SILVER COIN.

The Purpose of the Treasury Department in Issuing Silver—It is Not a Scheme for Specie Resumption.

The Director of the United States Mint has made the following statement of the purpose of the Government in paying out silver coin: In this, as other countries, where gold is the sole standard or measure of value, silver coins are overvalued for the purpose of rendering them inexportable. They are manufactured and issued on Government account, the law, however, placing, directly or indirectly, a limit on their issue to prevent redundancy. If issued in times of specie payment beyond the requirement of the public for change, such coin will not maintain their purchasing power with the standard coins. Owing to various causes in this and other countries, silver has declined in value to a point at which the Government can purchase it with gold, manufacture it into small coin, and pay it out at a fair profit. The Government has recently purchased a quantity of silver bullion sufficient for its purposes at $1.12¼ per standard ounce, and will manufacture it into coin at the fixed legal rate of 123 4-10 cents per ounce, the difference between the purchasing and issuing rates being a fraction of 12 cents per ounce, or about 10¼ per cent. on the gold coin paid in purchase. This operation it believed to be a more profitable one for the Treasury, and also more advantageous to the public in the present condition of the money market than the sale of gold for legal-tender notes, and is not a scheme for the resumption of specie payments, but simply a compliance with the mint laws. A dollar in United States currency will purchase a little more gold in the market than a dollar of small silver coins. The dollars will, therefore, soon find their level, and unless there be a rise in both the prices of gold and silver, small coins must circulate concurrently with paper money. The Government has in possession of Assistant Treasurers about $500,000 in silver coin, and at the mint and assay offices in silver bullion and coin about $2,000,000. This stock is ample for the present. This mode of paying out silver coin will be continued until circumstances shall dictate a contrary course. As proper, the Government will exact the full seignorage required by law, but will not undertake to control the disposition of the coin after it is paid out. The coin will then become the property of holders, who may do what they please with it. This course was not decided upon until it had been fully considered by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Of Growing Old.

When are we growing old? A sound judgment and strict honesty are necessary to answer the question fairly to one's self. Here is what the "County Parson" says of it:

"By growing old I now understand reaching midway between 40 and 50, not without a tendency to get nearer the latter age, once hardly imaginable as a personal reality. And when one has in this grave sense grown old, is there any fact which is more pressed upon one than this: that there is such a long look-back now? The prospect stretches far. Memory is still keen and retentive; the distant prospect has not faded into mistiness; and as you go on, and now and then turn to look back, there is just so much added to the view. Once it was wonderful to hear a man talk of what he had done twenty years ago; still more, of what had happened thirty years ago; it seemed a vast stretch of time, possible indeed in the experience of others, but inconceivable in one's own. For every human being is like Sidney's shepherd boy in this, that he fails to take in that he will ever grow old. It seems yesterday since the writer, reading for the bar (how much English law lost in him!) diligently frequented Westminister Hall and the Guildhall; and seeing vigorous barristers roaring away to common juries, or going on with a cross-examination in which [illegible]gan with the sharp and minacious Now sir! I listened with wonder to the [illegible]ance that the vigorous barrister had worn a wig and gown for five-and-twenty years, or five-and-thirty. Surely he ought to be dead long ago. That was the reflection then. It is different now. It has been discovered that the time passes away to the amount of twenty years or more; but that it is really a very short while; and it leaves the human being not so much changed; still with the old likings, hopes, and wishes; still with the old weakness and faults; still the same man. Furthermore, as years accumulate behind one, so does work. You have done such a deal, it mounts up into something awful to think of. And this though very much of the work done leaves no permanent trace, but just suffices to do what is required by the day, and to keep the machinery going. You have written fourteen letters this morning; you have visited eighteen sick folk this afternoon. It had all to be done. Had you not done it, you would have been miserable in the sense of duty neglected. But there is nothing to show for it. It is not like the abiding pages of inestimable theology or mild morality, which, being written, you lay up in a box—the abiding memorial of past labor. It frightened one, in the old days, to hear men in advanced life speak of the work they had done. I remember the sense of awe with which I heard a clergyman of about sixty years mention (with no air of recording an exploit) that he had at one period of his life, written one hundred and fifty lectures on St. Luke's Gospel. I gazed upon him with the feeling: And are you there living to tell it."

The Transportation Question.

The committee of the United States Senate are now prosecuting their inquiries into matters pertaining to the carrying trade with very gratifying earnestness and vigor. It is very likely that an able and exhaustive report upon this important subject will be submitted to Congress immediately at the opening of the session. In the language of Senator Conkling: "In the East and the West the problem of creating channels for commerce will assert itself and hold supremacy until it is successfully solved." The popular mind is now fully aroused to the vast interests involved in the question, and the agitation prevailing will not subside until every effort has been exhausted which promises to bring producer and consumer nearer to each other. There is no stimulant so potent as self-interest in directing the thought and the action of the masses, and in this matter every man in the country may be said to have a practical concern. At the same time there are difficulties in the way of accomplishing the objects in view which it will not do to ignore or overrate. One of these is the jealousy with which any local system of internal improvements undertaken by the Federal Government is likely to be regarded in certain quarters; and the other is the opposition of the existing companies, whose monopoly of the carrying business will be threatened. But the necessity for a remedy of the evils complained of is so imperative and urgent that all minor considerations must give way before it. The interior of our continent, the granary of the world, must have direct, continuous, and uninterrupted outlets to the ocean, and to secure this no sacrifice can be too great.—Inter-Ocean.

Return of the Juniata.

The United States steamer Juniata has returned from a five months' cruise in the Arctic seas, in search of the Hall expedition. Although the Juniata did not have the honor of rescuing the missing men—all of whom are now safe at home—she made a perilous voyage, in circumstances which are exceedingly creditable both to the bravery and seamanship of her officers and crew. It is understood that she brings with her documents of much importance, which were found by the Tigress, and which will throw new light upon the melancholy fate of Sir John Franklin and his men.

SOME interesting and important statistics of casualties occurring to emigrant ships dispatched from England during the last twenty-one years have been furnished by the Emigration Commissioners. The result for the entire period shows that 15,057 ships were sent to sea with 4,741,669 persons on board, and the total losses to have been fifty-nine vessels, with 4,986 lives, or about one-tenth of one per cent. of the whole number who sailed.

ORIGIN OF THE WORD PANIC.—The word panic arose out of the battle of Marathon. In that immortal fight a mere handful of Greeks encountered an infinite host of Persians, and put them to utter rout. How did they do it? The Persians were smitten by the god Pan with a sudden causeless and extreme fright. They lost their wits, and that state of things took its name from the god who produced it.

COSTLY WINE.—A few weeks ago there was sold at the castle of Johannisberg, from the famous cellars of Prince Metternich, a cask of the finest wine in the world—at least in the estimation of those who like it—genuine Johannisberger. It was the best of the famous vintage of 1861, and was bought by Consul Bauer, of Moscow, at the enormous price of $26,000 guilders, or about $10 a bottle.

THE slowly-starving editor of a paper in Brattleboro', Vt., drops into poetry, as follows:

"We had sweet dreams the other night,
When all around was still;
We dreamed we saw a host of folks
Pay up their printers' bill.
We wish the dream would come to pass,
And our empty pockets fill—
Tar da ump a te diddle dum,
Te tump te tiddle dill.

WHEN Gounod, the French composer, is at work writing music he keeps a tub of very cold water under his desk to put his feet in. After writing an hour his head grows extremely hot, and then he plunges his feet in the water and obtains relief. It is a dangerous remedy. He works from twelve to fourteen hours a day.

WHEN does a man feel girlish?—When he makes his maiden speech.

Indebtedness of the Country.

Gen. Butler delivered an address at the New Hampshire State Fair on the 2nd inst. His remarks on the indebtedness of the country are worthy the consideration of every thinking person. The following we give our readers.

The tendency of our people, whether in their national, municipal and social organization, or in their personal capacity, to go in debt, can not have escaped the attention of every discerning mind. Indeed, drawing drafts on the future, payable by posterity, and burdening the present generation to pay the interest, is the resort for carrying on all enterprises and has assumed such proportions, and is fraught with such consequences, that the mind of statesman and philosopher of political economies may well be turned to it with the greatest attention if not alarm because of its possible results upon our future national prosperity. Our national Government is owing $2,000,000,000, on which we are paying an interest, an average of rising six per cent. reckoning that interest in the currency with which all our products are measured. At least three-fourths of that amount is due to foreign bankers and capitalists. If this were all, and no other consequence rose from it, there need be little anxiety, and it would be hardly worth the attention of the statesman or economist, in calculating the future of the nation. Divided among 40,000,000 of people, in a country of the expense and resources of ours, it would be easily managed. But every State in this Union, with hardly an exception, has debts amounting in the aggregate to quite $400,000 000. But our indebtedness does not stop there. Quite every county, every city and town in every State in the Union owes debts, more or less, to an amount, in the aggregate, to perhaps one-third as much as the debts of the States, including the advances made municipal, railroads and other like enterprises. Nor do we stop there. Our railroads have borrowed and are owing a bonded debt of $600,000,000. Nor does the furor of indebtment yet stop Almost every college and institution of learning, foom the modest academy up to the university, each and all owe sums of which an approximation can hardly be made, and which no statistics show. Nay, we go still farther. We draw upon posterity to get the means of hearing the Gospel. All know that a very large majority of the thousands of churches which the census shows have buildings dotting our lands, have been built on credit given, in fact, by the coming generation.

All Hands Below.

A good story is told of a parrot who had always lived on board of a ship, but who escaped at one of the Southern ports and took refuge in a church. Soon after the congregation assembled, and the preacher began preaching to them in his earnest fashion, saying that there was no virtue in them, that every one of them would go to hell unless they speedily repented. Just as he spoke the sentence, up spoke the parrot from his hiding place.

"All hands below!"

To say that "all hands" were startled would be a mild way of putting it.

The peculiar voice and unknown source had more effect on them than the parson's voice ever had. He waited a moment, and then, a shade or two paler, he repeated the warning.

"All hands below!" again rung out from somewhere.

The preacher started from his pulpit and looked anxiously around, inquiring if anybody had spoken.

"All hands below!" was the reply, at which the entire panic-stricken congregation got up, and a moment after they all bolted for the doors, the preacher trying to be first, and during the time the mischievous bird kept up his yelling, "All hands below!"

"There was one old woman there who was lame and could not go out so fast as the rest, and in a short time she was left entirely alone. Just as she was about to hobble out the parrot flew down, and alighting on her shoulder again yelled in her ear, "All hands below!"

"No, no, Mister Devil!" shrieked the old woman, "you can't mean me. I don't belong here. I go to the other church across the way."

* * *

Undoubtedly the panic did not fall upon the country a day too soon. It has played havoc with an unlimited number of speculations, but it is well that they were not allowed to grow to greater proportions. People begin to realize the danger of beginning unbounded systems of business upon no real foundation. It has revealed the fact that there has been a vast amount of defalcation and dishonesty in financial trusts. The situation at present is not of the most cheerful kind, but the past year has been a prosperous one, in the sense that we have had abundant crops throughout the country; and there never was a time when our wheat, corn, bread stuffs, cotton etc., were in such active demand by the outside world as now. So, mangre an endless lot of grumbling and no little suffering among the poor laboring classes, we will probably get upon a firm financial footing in the course of the next year.

* * *

The Democracy of Pennsylvania felt that their most earnest efforts would be paralyzed by the work in Philadelphia; and this consideration kept tens of thousands of them away from the polls, along with an almost equal number of Republicans who have grown disgusted with the corruption and misdeeds of their party leaders. The official returns will show that nearly two hundred thousand of the voters of Pennsylvania neglected to discharge on Tuesday the most important and political duties. We do not excuse or justify this apathy but merely explain it. So long as the Registry Act enables the organized ruffianism of Philadelphia to pile up as large a fraudulent majority as the leaders of the republican ring may require, so long will this torpidity exist throughout the rural portion of Pennsylvania, and this feeling will not be confined to one only of the political parties.—Harrisburg (Pa) Patriot.

* * *

A New Fairfield citizen was awakened the other night by a disturbance among his hens, and got up, too, as a matter of course, and immediately fell the whole length of a flight of stairs, which is also not to be wondered at. An examination revealed the coop intact, the hens merely waking to turn over, or having been troubled with dreams of an unpleasant nature. As the nearest profane man lived two miles away, the feelings of the hen owners can better be imagined than described.

It is gratifying to us to inform the public that Dr. L. Q. C. Wishart's Pine Tree Tar Cordial, for Throat and Lungs diseases, has gained an enviable reputation from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, and from thence to some of the first families of Europe, not through the press alone, but by persons throughout the States actually benefited and cured at his office. While he publishes less, so say our reporters, he is unable to supply the demand. It gains and holds its reputation—

First. Not by stopping cough, but by loosening and assisting nature to throw off the unhealthy matter collected about the throat and bronchial tubes, which causes irritation.

Second. It removes the cause of irritation of the mucous membrane and bronchial tubes, assists the lungs to act and throw off the unhealthy secretions, and purifies the blood

Third. It is free from squills, lobelia, ipecac and opium, of which most throat and lung remedies are composed, which allay cough only, and disorganize the stomach. It has a soothing effect on the stomach, acts on the liver and kidneys, and lymphatic and nervous regions, thus reaching to every part of the system, and in its invigorating and purifying effects it has gained a reputation which it must hold above all others in the market.

What the Ohio Victory Means.

(Extract from the speech of Senator Thurman at Cleveland.)

But the victory we celebrate means more the perpetuity of the Democratic party.

It means that dead issues shall remain dead issues, and that no party can succeed upon any but the living issues of the day.

It means that the people can no longer be moved by mean, miserable, false charges against the Democratic party in respect to the war.

It means that the Government shall be reformed, and that no genius, however exalted; no services, however great, can atone for a want of integrity.

It means that the Government shall be administered in the interest of the people and not in the interest of schemers and rings.

It means that economy shall take the place of profusion, and equal and exact justice the place of oppression.

It means that taxation shall be lightened and its burdens be imposed with greater equality and justice.

It means that the Constitution is not obsolute, and that its provisions cannot be violated with impunity.

It means that the Federal Government shall be supported in the exercise of its constitucional rights, and that nullification and secession shall not be tolerated; but, on the other hand, that local self-government shall be preserved and the reserved rights of the States and the people shall be maintained.

It means that individual liberty shall be cherished and protected, instead of being arbitrarily restrained.

All this it means, for with these principles inscribed on our banner we went to battle and, fighting for them, won the victory.

It has been said of us, by our opponents, that we are men absorbed in a vain admiration of the past and incapable of appreciating anything that does not bear the stamp of antiquity. And the sarcasm uttered long ago against the Bourbons,—"that they learned nothing and forgot nothing"—has been freely applied to us. Nothing could be more untrue, unjust, than these accusations. The principle of Democracy, upon which our party is founded, has been, and is yet, the greatest inovator of modern times.—Its influence was felt in Europe when the continent of America was yet unknown. Our forefathers brought it with them when they crossed the great ocean, and in every settlemont they made from Plymouth Rock to the Gulf of Mexico, it became the vital principle of the colonial governments. It found full expression in the great Declaration of Seventy-six, and more than any other cause perhaps served to achieve American Independence.—From that day to this it has battled steadfastly for the rights of the people. It has opposed property qualifications, special privileges and unjust monopoly in all their forms. It has elevated the humble, ameliorated the condition of the poor, disseminated education, welcomed to our shores the oppressed of the world. It has liberalized, more or less, nearly every Government in Europe, and has overturned thrones erected more than a thousand years ago. It is still at work to free mankind from oppression, to improve the condition of labor, and to bless all men by a system of equal and just laws. Such is the Democratic principle, and a party like ours, that is founded upon it, must from its very nature and constition, be a party of progress.

* * *

Of the members of the last House of Representatives who will not be present in the Forty third Congress, the absense of no one wil be more regretted than that of Michael C Kerr, of Indiana. Mr. Keer's acknowledged ability and honesty commanded the respect of his political opponents, and he was looked upon as the leader of his party in the House. His work as a member of the most important committee of Congress, has been ardorous but faithfully performed. His knowledge of our financial matter, and his thorough acquaintance with every subject connected with political economy, will make his absence from the Committee of Ways and Means felt in the next House. After a continued service of eight years as a member of Congress Mr. Kerr retires from that body with a record that is untarnished by a single act of corruption or dishonesty,—The republican party of the State should feel proud of the fact that they defeated Mr. Kerr for Congressman from the State at large with the salary grabber Billy Williams. It is a matter of congratulation. Such men as Mr. Kerr cannot remain long in private life, and we expect soon to see him called to fill some public station deserving of his honesty and ability

What Circuses are Worth.

[From the New Orleans Picayune, Nov. 7.]

About a year ago there visited this city, with flaming bills and windy agents, a portion of—or what purported to be—Barnum's Great American Circus, and took up position on the vacant square at the corner of St. Charles and Calliope streets. Here it remained for a week, but a succession of terrible rain storms and similar disasters not rendering the position a pecuniary success, the whole concern bundled up in disgust and started somewhere up the country—we think for the Teche. Here it remained for a while, but not drawing as largely as was expected returned to the city and disbanded—a portion of the animals being sold here, while the others, with the stuffed whale, etc., were taken back North, though a large portion of the "plunder," consisting of wagons, tent-poles, stuffed animals, etc., were left stored in Algiers.

It having been announced that these would be sold at auction and it being stated that fabulous prices would be obtained, a Picayune reporter was on hand to note sale, which was conducted by Messrs. Montgomery, the auctioneer of this city.

It having been a popular idea that circuses cost a mint of money, the surprise was really great at the prices obtained. The sale opened with a lot of about twenty wagons, which appeared in the "grand parade" as a "vast cavalcade of caravans purchased at an enormous expense." Upon these the biddin opened lively, but notably failed, the lot being purchased by various parties at an average of about sixty dollars apiece.

TThe next lot put up was a collection of stuffed animals, announced in the play bills, as a "rare assortment of animals exhibited by no other show." No one in the crowd apparently wanted these at all, and they were finally knocked down to an astonished bidder for five dollars.

This was certainly astonishing, but the lively auctioneer announced, "Now, gentlemen, I would desire to show you one of the greatest curiosities of modern times, which is calculated to have cost no more than ten thousand dollars. Look at it!" And public attention was directed to the large stone figure, which all who visited the circus will remember the Cardiff giant.

Every one looked on as the auctioneer said, "Now, gentlemen, how much will you bid?" One bidder said fifty cents, another a dollar, and then a dollar and a half, and finally it was knocked down to a prominent wholesale dealer for eight dollars To think of the Cardiff giant being brought so low! It might be apropos to mention here that the buyer, after spending eighteen dollars to move it from its place, and not knowing what to do with it, who will probably sell it to a colored delegation as a proper present to Grant.

With these figures it can well be imagined the rest of the articles sold for a more song. Thirty robes in which, according to the old placards, "a gorgeous panoply of handsome ladies and gallant gentlemen will parade through the streets," brought as a lot one hundred dollars. The tent poles, soats, etc. were purchased for sixty dollars, and sundry othor smaller "relics" for from ten to twenty five.

The sale, indeed, proved that whatever really such articles as circuses originally cost, they could be bought nowadays very cheap,and at such figures that any one could start a very respectable show museum, and all for a couple of thousand dollars. These figures must not, however, be accepted as a standard, for animals have sometimes brought immense sums, ranging from one to ten thousand dollars, but as a sample of the hardness of the times, and that there are not many in the Crescent City or neighborhood to start a circus.

* * *

It is stated that many of the depositors of the late firm of Jay Cooke & Co. are in actual want. To them this affair is a serious matter, Meantime, the firm are using every expedient to compound with their creditors, make cunning agreements and do any way to evade the course of legal bankruptcy. With infinite cheek they ask creditors, banks chiefly, to settle for fifteen per cent. cash and the balance in North Pacific bonds at eightyfive cents. Worse things are charged. Property has been spirited away since proceedings have begun, and no one can tell where they get the cash to buy in their paper with at a heavy discount All their proceedings have a bad look.

Teachers' Institute.

Interesting Proceedings.

Our place has been, so far this week, monopolized by an unusually large number of school teachers in attendance at the Institute now in session. Supt. Barns informs us that the largest number ever known to be present at the opening of a session was here last Monday, estimated at about one hundred and twenty-five.—We have been present on several occasions since the Institute begun, and are gratified to note the fact that we have a very intelligent looking corps of teachers in DeKalb County. We trust that external appearances are not deceptive in this case. They are a sociable, jolly set throughout, with very little of the vinegar element among them. We like to see an assemblage of this kind good natured.—We think they catch the inspiration to a great extent, from the Superintendent, who is good nature and genality personified. From what we saw, we concluded that these are seasons of great pleasure and enjoyment to all, as it should be.

MONDAY—FORENOON SESSION

Supt. J. A. Barns made some preliminary remarks, after which the Institute was opened by prayer by Rev. Mr. Fisher. The Superintendent then read the regular programme of exercises. Explained the manner in which he proposed to organise and conduct the Institute, and announced the names of those he had employed to assist him in the Institute work, among them Mr. W. N. Hull, of Pittsburg, Pa., and Mr. John Goodison, of Detroit, Mich. Recess.

Motion that Mrs. J. A. Barns and C. H. Thurston act as Secretaries. Carried

D. M. Allen moved that three committees be appointed, one on Arithmetic, one on Map Drawing and one on Penmanship. The first number of each to be appointed by the Supt., the second by the Institute and the third by the first two. Motion prevailed. Committee on Arithmetic consisted of D. M. Allen, A. R. Hoffman. On Map Drawing, Miss Daniels, C. P. Houser. On Penmanship, Saml Pepple, H. H. Keep.

Motion by R. H. Gilbert that a Query box be provided, was carried. After which some suggestions by the Superintendent.

Question by the Supt., "Give the reason for the rule for pointing off the quotient in divisor of decimals. Answers written and delivered to the committee on Arithmetic. Adjourned until 1½ o'clock.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Opening by the choir, entitled 'August. Supt. Barns then addressed the Institute half an hour on the "History of Indiana." The following question was then discussed. What advantage is derived by teachers and pupils from the printed answers mathematical problems. H. H. Keep was first to speak on this subject, he took the ground that no benefit was derived by either pupil or teacher. A. B. Hoffman then followed with some very interesting remarks, thinks no good can be gained. Sumner Otis took the same ground that no advantage could be gained. L. H. Shoub followed with remarks to the same effect. A. R. Hoffman again took the floor and gave an example to Mr. Keep and requested him to explain it which was done to his satisfaction. Rev. Mr Faurot then advanced a few thoughts.—Recess.

Song by choir entitled "The Old Mountain Pines." Lesson in Astronomical Geography by D. M. Allen., Several of the teachers took part in this exercise.—Motion was then made to appoint a critic. A. R. Hoffman was then appointed critic for Tuesday, critic to report twice each day.

Motion made by A. R. Hoffman to have a Social this evening—motion carried. Remarks by the Supt., and Rev. Faurot. Adjourned, 7½ a m.

Evening, met at the School House for a Social. Declamations and reading by Messrs. Thurston Allen, A. R. Hoffman, and Ackley, also by Misses H. Schoonover and Rush. Recess.

Mr. Hull, of Pittsburg was introduced and entertained the teachers with picture drawing and declamations, all of which were highly appreciated. Adjourned.

TUESDAY—MORNING EXERCISES.

From 8 to 9 o'clock Prof. Hull instructed the class in Primary Drawing.—Short recess.

Opening exercises, song by the choir, entitled, "While the Days are Going by." Prayer by Rev. Mr. Faurot, Solo and Chorus by choir, entitled "Rolling River"

OLD BACHELOR JOHN.

BY SAUL POTTS.

[illegible] can't, fer there ain't but few folks cares
To hear me lettin' on about myself and my affairs;
I never was a talker, and I'm most too old a bird
To be l'arnin' of new tricks, but I take ye at your word.

That ye'd really like to hear me tell the story of my life;
And why I'm gettin' old and grizzled, 'n' never had no wife.
Wal—there ain't much story to it, and I don't pretend to be
No more 'v a hero, then what you'd 'a bin, if you'd bin me.

Folks that's married sometimes has a way of lookin' with contempt
On them that's single, though perhaps they never so much as dreamt
That there might be good reasons for their livin' as they do;
It seems to me ha'sh judgment—and kind'v onfeelin' too.

They sometimes call me crabbed, and a "dried-up, cross old bach."
It kind'v grates upon me, like a creakin', rusty latch—
For it makes me think of younger, happier days that I have seen;
'N if things hadn't bin just as they was, what I too might a bin.

It's nigh on five-and-thirty year, since first I come out West,
I thought I'd strike out for myself, it seemed to me the best;
My young heart was chock-full o' hope, and there was one fer whom
I could have cut my pathway through the thickest backwood's gloom.

Our family was large t' home, and the old folks hands was full;
So me 'n' my youngest brother thought we'd give their boat a pull.
I mean by that, we felt that if we lightened up their load,
Life wouldn't seem to them, perhaps, such a dreadful up-hill road.

I never had much schoolin', as you'll know to hear me talk,
I've kinder picked up what I know—perhaps know "cheese from chalk;"
Book-l'arnin' ain't my strong p'int, but of pioneerin' ways
I've seed as much as most folks has, that's goin' nowadays.

The first time I come West, I come through York State, by canal—
The railroad wasn't runnin' yet, and tallygraphs was—wal,
If you'd told folks that in thirty years news'd be sent on wires
Clean round the airth, they'd call ye one o' the biggest kind o' liars.

'S I said, we pioneered along—a good deal o' the way
The country was a settlin' up even at that early day—
We stopped first in Ohio, then we looked at Michigan,
But we thought that goin' further West would be a better plan.

So we "entered land at Gov'ment price, in Southern Ilinoy.
My brother's was adj'inin' mine—he's dead, 'n' his oldest boy
Is married, carries on the farm, 'n' lives up on the hill—
And I—carry mine one on too—but I'm unmarried still.

'S I said before, I left behind me when I come out West,
One whom I loved, God knows how much, and she too, loved me best.
It was agreed that I'd go back and take her for my wife
'N a year or two, or's soon's I fairly got a start in life.

I used to hear from Hetty pretty often. She could write
A first-rate kind o' letter, better'n mine a mighty sight.
Mine was always blotched and bungled, but for all that, Hetty knew
Every word inside come from my heart, and that to her was true.

It took a month or so for letters to reach us in them days,
And when mails went by stage-coach it did seem a dre'dful ways;
But it's time makes distance seem so long, even in these days of steam;
And to them that's separated wide, it's about's it used to seem.

Wal, I'd got some forty acres cleared—I built a log house too,
And got things fixed as comf'table's I could where all was new—
'N' I calc'lated the next spring to go back to Varmout,
And marry Hetty, 'n' bring her home, our minds was made up on't.

That winter was a pretty hard one, all the country through;
Sich a one, for heavy snows and thaws, I think a never knew.
Our mails was all behind-hand, for the roads was powerful bad;
And a single line from Hetty was the only word I had.

It was written weeks before, and in a shaky kind o' hand,
As if she'd had a very heavy fit o' sickness, and
All it said was, "John, dear, I'm not well, could you not come home?"
When I read it I was's if a clap o' thunder'd struck me dumb.

"Could I come?" I'd like to see the airthly power could hold me back.
It didn't take me very long my clothes and traps to pack.
I traveled night and day, as fast as stagin' would allow,
And ten days was a quicker trip than two or three is now.

And at the end of ten long days, I reached my native town,
One bright spring afternoon, just as the sun was going down,
I hurried past folks that I knew, and them that knew me well,
When all at once I heerd the toll of the solemn "passin' bell."

'N' I knew that somebody was dead—what? No! it couldn't be
My Hetty! that's just her age, the bell struck twenty-three.
I hurried faster, almost run, till I reached the old brown gate,
'N' then I knew, without bein' told, that I'd come home too late!

'N' then there come a blackness, and I can't remember more.
But they say for days and weeks I lay, just hoverin' at death's door,
Till finally, by God's help, and by nursin' of the best,
I got up on my feet again, and started back out West.

And now ye've heered my story, 'n' why I never had no wife,
Do you wonder any longer that I live this kind o' life?
Do ye wonder that my love went out like a candle in the wind
When Hetty died? 'n' in livin' so d' ye think I've sinned?

Perhaps 't may be so—wal—may God forgive me if I have,
But my heart for thirty years has laid with Hetty in her grave,
And I carry on my farm alone, and I'm waitin' for the day
When the good Lord will call me, 'n' I'll be ready to obey.

A GRIZZLY PRIZE FIGHT.

Gen. James S. Brisbin gives the following sketch of the exploits of a noted frontiersman. The incidents were related to the General by Mr. Belden, the famous hunter, trapper, and guide of the plains:

I was one of the first men in 1858 to arrive at Pike's Peak. I came up from the Missouri with a friend of my father's, and we stopped at Denver, or rather, I should say, where Denver now is, for the city was then composed of a few grog shops and shanties. In one of the mining camps I became acquainted with a queer fellow they called Bruiser Sam. He was a powerful man, and sometimes drank a good deal, but was always good-tempered and kind-hearted. The miners were a rough set in those days, and delighted in the most brutal sports. Prize fighting was one of their pastimes, and at this Bruiser Sam excelled—no man in all the camps being able to stand up long before him. His feats of strength were prodigious. Often would he take a barrel of liquor by the chimes, and, knocking out the bung, lift it up and drink from the hole, as easily as if it were a small keg. Then he would stand on a box twelve inches high and lift one hundred and eighty pounds with his teeth. He could pick up a three-bushel bag of flour with his mouth, and carry it a rod. One day a saloon-keeper offended Sam, and to have revenge he went out into the street, and, shouldering a large work-horse, carried it into the saloon, leaving the enraged barkeeper to get it out and down the steps as best he could. At another time he carried a rock into the store and dropped it through the floor.

Sam's skin was as white and smooth as a girl's; but all over his arms, shoulders and broad chest were bunches of knotty muscles as large as one's fist. He was a well-built and fine looking man, his waist being remarkably small, his hips broad, the legs well set, and feet small. Once his face was handsome, but whisky had bleared the eyes, and the nose was pimpled and red; still, Sam was a good-looking man, and, when dressed up in a new buckskin suit with yellow fringe, and his long brown hair combed out in curls about his neck, he was a picture of an athletic frontiersman.

However, Sam was fast degenerating into a loafer; he had left off work and gone to living by his strength, just as thousands of men live by their wits in the great cities. Any one would pay Sam's liquor to see him lift a barrel by the ends and drink from the bung-hole; and occasionally, by way of variety, he would shoulder a horse or a mule for a glass of rum.

Dissipation told rapidly on "The Man of Steel," as he was called, and when I saw him in the spring he had delirium tremens, and it took five men to hold him. His frame was wasted away, the knots of sinews were gone, his chest drawn in, and the skin of his body soft.

It was about this time an old Englishman named Jones arrived at the mines, and hearing of Sam, expressed a desire to see him. Old Jones was a well known prize fighter, but of late years had given up the ring himself and turned trainer. Sam's fame excited the envy of old Jones, and he no sooner saw him than he offered to fight Sam. The miners were astonished and tried to dissuade Jones from his purpose, but nothing would do but he must have a bout with Sam. So the day was set. Sam was sick on the morning of the fight and looked badly enough, but bets ran two to one on "The Man of Steel" against the Englishman. Time was called, and the Englishman bounded into the ring, while Sam came up slowly, and looked languid and feeble; but at the very first pass he hit John Bull between the eyes, and no amount of sponging and bathing could induce him to stand upon his legs again that day. It was feared that Sam had broken the Englishman's skull, but he got about in a day or two, and soon afterward both he and Sam disappeared from the saloons. The barkeepers were astonished. Sam did not come around any more for his grog, and no one could imagine where he had gone, or what he was at. Foul play was beginning to be suspected, when it leaked out that Sam was in training, and that the Englishman was his trainer. After old Jones got that awful lick from Sam's brawny fist, he gave him no peace until he agreed to go into training and accompany the Englishman to England, there to fight the giants of the prize ring. Jones had not much money, but at his instigation a man named Dunham came over with plenty of cash, and as soon as Dunham arrived old Jones quit, and the new Englishman became Sam's regular trainer.

I saw Sam once while he was in training, and he looked well, the knots were on his arm again, and the great chest round and firm. He had been at his dumb-bells, sand-bags, and gum-balls about six weeks when, one morning he got mad about something, knocked both Dunham and old Jones down, and made his escape from the keepers into the street. Stopping at the saloons and taking several drinks, he did not forget it was his hour for training, and amused himself by knocking down every stout fellow he met. Finally, after the Sheriff and half the town had been whipped, Sam was captured and put in jail; but here a new difficulty presented itself, for the jail was not a strong one, and Sam swore he would instantly tear it down if they did not let him go. On promising that he would go straight to his lodgings, the door was opened and Sam kept his word, for he went directly home and went to bed. This outbreak was so unlike Sam's natural disposition that every one was at a loss to account for it; and, soon afterward, another ebullition of passion occurring, the Man of Steel's trainers abandoned him in disgust, and took themselves off East, each carrying with him, as a parting gift from Sam, a pair of black eyes and a swollen nose.

Sam, now left to himself, fell to drinking again, went about the saloons as of old, lifting barrels, pitching stones, and shouldering horses for liquor. It was soon observed that he was growing weak; he lifted the barrels with difficulty, and preferred to drink from a glass instead of a bunghole. He grew thin in flesh, his muscles disappeared, and he became the shadow of his former self.

At this time a number of shoulder-hitters and desperadoes arrived at the mines, and gave Sam some trouble; but he finally conquered them all, and as the last fellow got licked he exclaimed: "Well, if you can lick me, you can't lick a grizzly bear!" Sam swore he could lick a grizzly bear, and that single-handed, alone, he would fight one. There was a grizzly in the camp that had been caught by the miners when a cub, and raised by them. The bear was now nearly full grown, and although a great, powerful brute, was quite tame and harmless. It was not long before some wretches had arranged a fight between the dumb beast and Bruiser Sam, and the day was set. The bear was to be chained to a tree by the neck, and Sam was to fight him one hour with his naked fists. Sam again went into training, with Jim Peyton for his trainer, and long before the day of the fight Peyton reported that his pupil was in splendid condition, and "would as soon fight as go a-fishing."

The day came, and with it a great crowd. The bets were three to one on Sam, and many really believed he would whip the bear. Poor Bruin—a great shaggy-coated fellow—was tied to a stake by a chain twelve feet long, and was as good-tempered as he could be, standing on his hind legs, and scampering about with delight at the sight of so many people. Perhaps there was as little of the real beast in Bruin as there was in many of the two-legged animals who came to see him fight. The keepers of the bear began teasing and poking him with sharp poles and irons, and although he took it quite coolly at first, he after a while growled fiercely and tugged at his chain. Sam now appeared with his keeper, Peyton, and was received with loud cheers by the human animals who wished to see a man and a beast fight.

Stepping into the ring Sam appeared for battle, stripping off all his clothing, except his boots, pants and drawers. His broad chest contrasted strangely with the shaggy coat of the beast, as the two combatants stood glaring at each other. The intelligent animal seemed to understand the situation in a moment, and, raising on his legs, walked toward Sam, who tried to hit him, between the eyes, hoping to break his skull; but, failing in this, he stepped to one side, and giving the bear a powerful blow, knocked him down. Cheer after cheer greeted Sam as he stepped from the ring, and the men who had bet on the bear really began to fear they would lose their money. Five minutes were allowed between the rounds, and the baiters poked the beast vigorously all the time, so that when Sam came up again he was in a towering passion.

The moment Sam crossed the ring the bear recognized him and bounded the full length of the chain. So great was the rage of the beast that the people drew back in horror, and even Sam grew pale. Again the bear leaped forward, and taking his chain in his paws attempted to break it. For a time it resisted all his efforts, but at length snapped in twain, and the affrighted people fled terror-stricken from the plain.

The bear dashed upon Sam, who bravely stood his ground, and actually succeeded in felling the bear to the earth, but in doing so he lost his balance, and before he could escape the bear caught him with one claw, and hitting him on the face with the other, broke the poor fellow's jaw. Still Sam fought on with his jaw hanging on his breast and blood spirting from a dozen wounds. It was terrible; but, of course, the bear won, knocked Sam down finally and tearing open his chest with his sharp claws. By this time the people had got guns and returned to the field, where they fired volley after volley into poor Bruin until he lay quite still; and Sam was dead too, and they took up his body and the carcass of the bear and buried them both. And thus ende Bruiser Sam and his grizzly bear fight, which was perhaps the only bear prize fight ever fought in the world.

The Meanest Man in the World.

There has always been a spirited competition for the proud eminence of the meanest man in the world, and no decision has ever been reached. When ene aspirant has made a noble effort that seemed to command the palm of victory, another would enter the lists, and wither his laurels by a transcending achievement. But until the Times has further returns, it will champion the pretensions of a man residing at Newburyport, Mass. A short time ago this man's father, an estimable old gentleman of 80 years, went to visit him. The old gentleman took with him a small dog, which had been his pet and companion in his declining years. The son objected to this dog because it cost him nearly a cent a day to feed during his father's visit. Thereupon the noble and affectionate son went to the authorities and made complaint against his father for that he had an unlicensed dog. The old man was arrested and fined $20; and having no money, he was taken to jail, where he remained at the last accounts, while the son goes proudly on the even tenor of his way.

LATER—And now, as if to confirm the proposition with which this topic commenced, the Times finds a competitor for the honor which it had all but awarded to the Newburyport man. The hero in this case is an Iowa farmer, whose infant daughter was attacked by a snake. A woman who was present seized a spade and killed the reptile. In doing so she broke the handle of the spade, which belonged to the father. And that noble-spirited man made the poor woman pay the price of the broken implement. So the Times will never again attempt to decide who is the meanest man in the world.—Chicago Times.

Poison in Candy.

The colors of candy often excite remark. Some are supposed to be poisonous, and on this subject the Manufacturer and Builder remarks: "Litmus, indigo, and aniline blue are harmless blue colors, while chlorophyl, or the green coloring matter of leaves, is a harmless green; aniline green may also be used. The idea that aniline colors are poisonous is erroneous. It is true that the aniline oil itself (a colorless fluid from which the aniline colors are made) is a poison; but the antidote is to add something to change it into an aniline color, when it becomes comparatively harmless. The aniline colors are also so very powerful a coloring material that only a very minute quantity is needed to color very large amounts of candy; so that even if somewhat poisonous or injurious, it would be necessary to consume several hundred pounds of candy at once in order to produce any poisonous effects of the coloring matter." This will interest young children and school-girls, who would gladly run the risk of danger could they banquet on such a liberal scale. Another good authority, however, maintains that all aniline dyes are at least suspicious, and should be avoided for all culinary purposes.

A PARENT writes that he is annoyed and pained by his young son staying out at night, and asks a remedy for this rapidly growing evil. There are several remedies. The most effectual is to compel him to wear patched clothing.

Peat.

A company is organizing in London for the purpose of working extensive fields of peat in the highlands of Scotland. It is proposed to use the Clayton process, by which the fiber of the peat is thoroughly cut up, and converted into a dense pulp, which, when dry, becomes a solid mass as hard as oak. Condensed peat, it is observed, is preferable to coal for many industrial purposes. In particular, it is found to be better suited for iron-smelting, owing to the absence of sulphur and phosphorus, and also for use in the furnaces of steamers and locomative engines, on account of its superior heat-generating power. It is also admirably suited for domestic consumption, making a beautiful clear fire, free from smoke or any disagreeble smell, and is, in point of cleanliness, far superior to coal.

The Clergy of Memphis.

The Protestant clergy have been everywhere devoting their lives and energies to the alleviation of the sick in Memphis. They have knelt by the bedside of the sufferers and cheered them in their last moment of life; have gone into palaces and hovels and done their duty where duty called them. Many of them have fallen victims to their zeal for humanity. Not less patient and enduring have been the Catholic priests, five of whom have died of the fever, contracted in the line of duty. First died Father Daily, and then Fathers Carey, O'Brien, Leo, and Sheehy. In zeal there was no distinction of sects; all clergymen worked zealously as their calling demanded. The physicians were, however, best of all; they were everywhere, ready at a moment's call to enter the most lowly hovel and do whatever they could to alleviate suffering.

The Present Government of the Bank of England.

I remember once, in London, to have seen a young man with locks parted in the middle and abundant watch chain, and to have been greatly surprised when told that he was a Director of the Bank of England. I had supposed that a directorship of the bank was a dignity attained only by men of age, of great experience, and of grave and somber exterior. But the reverse is the case. Directors of the bank are always very young when elected. The reason is that, in time, the Director will be the Deputy-Governor and then the Governor. It is important that such a man shall be in the full vigor of life, and yet that he shall have had ample experience. So it is that the Directors from whom the Governor is chosen must be elected young. A certain portion of the Directors go out annually, and remain out for a year. But they are nearly always re-elected. When a vacancy occurs by death or resignation, the Board looks about among the old-established firms of the "city" and fix upon that young man whom they think will make the best Director. There is very little favor shown; the best man, or who seems the best man, is nearly always selected, and the position is greatly coveted.

It takes about twenty years for a Director, after his election, to reach the Governor's chair. The oldest of them who has not been in office is made Deputy-Governor, and on the retirement of the Governor he takes his place. The Governor serves two years. The members who retire annually are always the young ones, or those who have not reached the "chair." Those who have held the office of Governor always remain and, besides retaining their Directorship, are constituted into what is termed the "Committee of the Treasury." The functions of the committee are not very well defined, but it wields a sort of advisory power.

There is one very curious provision of the Bank of England. No banker or Director in any joint stock bank can be a Director of the Bank of England. One of the Rothschilds is on the Board, but the Rothschilds are not bankers in the English sense. The English limit the term to those individuals or companies with whom you can deposit a small sum payable on demand, and from whom you can draw it out in checks of any amount you choose. The Rothschilds do not do this; so they are not "bankers" in the English sense. The original reason of the restriction, which is now generally regarded as foolish and out of date, was that it was supposed that all banks would be in opposition to each other; they would compete just as houses in the same business compete, Therefore it was thought that no man should be on the Board of the Bank of England who was interested in any other bank. The reason, if it was ever good, has certainly now ceased to be of any value. The entire banking reserve of London and all England indeed is held by the banks. The other banks in London must, of course, keep a reserve, and they prefer that the Bank of England should have the custody of it. Their interests are therefore identical with those of the bank, for if the bank goes under they must go under too.

There are twenty-four Directors besides the Governor and Deputy-Governor. This Board is thought to be too large. It meets but once a week, and can then sit but for a short time. People get uneasy as soon as its session is prolonged beyond an hour so. A four hours' session, it has been said, would bring on a panic. Anxious persons gather about the door outside, and await the close of the conference. It would seem that some better arrangement might be made. The knowledge of the effect of the lengthy deliberations of the Board upon the public must produce haste and excitement within.

A Love-Letter.

Here is a specimen of Jamaica negro literature, in the shape of a love-letter from a colored school-master to his sweetheart: "Dear Eliza: I take the liberty of myself to inform you this few few lines hoping you may not offend as often is. I had often seen you in my hearts. Their are myriads of loveliness in my hearts toward you. My loving intentions were really unto another female, but now the love between I and she are very out now entirely. And now his the excepted time I find to explain to my lovely appearance" (presumably apparent love), "but whether if their be any love in your hearts or mind towards me it is hard for I to know, but his I take this liberty to inform you this kind, loving and affectionate letter. . . . Your affectionate lover affraied. P. S.—Dear Eliza, wether if you are willing or not. Please to send me an ansure back. Do my dear."

High Prices.

High prices still rule the hour. Almost the only thing that remoins stationary are the subscriptions to newspapers. Everything else remains where it was at the close of the war, one to two hundred per cent. above the old rates. Two to four dollars to hear the opera, three dollars to see Salvini, four to five dollars a day at a hotel; while beef, butter, flour and bread are as high as if cattle had grown scarce, cows had gone dry, and the fields produced scanty crops. Of course, labor has advanced with everything else, because labor produces everything. Meanwhile, the newspapers, that are at least a hundred per cent. better than ever, get no more per copy, and little more for advertisements, than they got fifteen years ago, though the cost of the white paper they use has nearly doubled.—New York Graphic.

IMPROVISATION.

BY BAYARD TAYLOR.

Fill, for we drink to Labor,
  Labor, you know, is Prayer;
I'll be as grand as my neighbor
  Abroad, and at home as bare;
    Debt and bother and hurry!
      Others are burdened so;
    Here's to the goddess Worry,
      And here's to the goddess Show!

Reckless of what comes after,
  Silent of whence we come;
Splendor and feast and laughter
  Make the questioner dub.
    Debt, and bother, and hurry!
      Nobody needs to know;
    Here's to the goddess Worry,
      And here's to the goddess Show

Fame is what you have taken,
  Character's what you give;
When to this truth you waken,
  Then you begin to live!
    Debt, and bother, and hurry!
      Others have risen so;
    Here's to the goddess Worry,
      And here's to the goddess Show!

Honor's a thing for derision,
  Knowledge a thing reviled;
Love is a vanishing vision,
  Faith is the toy of a child!
    Debt, and bother, and hurry!
      Honesty's old and slow;
    Here's to the goddess Worry,
      And here's to the goddess Show!

A FEW days since a seedy person applied to a wealthy citizen for help, and received the small sum of five cents. The giver remarked as he handed him the pittance: "Take it; you are welcome; our ears are always open to the distressed." "That may be," replied the recipient, "but never before in my life have I seen so small an opening for such large ears."

A HORSE belonging to Marshall's coal-yard ran away on West street Tuesday afternoon. A man who witnessed the affair ran out in the street, and, catching hold of the tail-board of the cart, succeeded in getting in. It was his intention to grasp the reins which were attached to the dash-board, but as soon as he struck on his feet, he began to realize that a coal-cart had no springs nor other appliances for helping it over rough places. His face, which had in the beginning an expression of mild ferocity, suddenly changed to a series of extraordinary grimaces and most grotesque and bewildering pulsations. He made a grab at the reins, but, owing to the awful uncertainty of the cart's motion, came down on his knees instead, and nearly bumped his head off on the side-board. Then he bounded up on his feet again, and at once jumped out of the rear end of the cart and landed square on the back of his heels, and immediately turned three back-somersaults before he could recover from the momentum.—Danbury News.

Pat Donan Still Lives.

A statement has been going around to the effect that Pat Donan, who disturbs the tranquillity of the infernal regions from his chair in the office of the Lexington Caucasian, was dead, but a glance at the broadside of that paper will satisfy the most casual observer that he still lives. For instance, this paragraph: "Sile" (meaning Woodson, the Governor of Missouri) "has got back to Jefferson, from the squash and dondey show, where he shone pre-eminent, as the hugest dead-beat and longest-eared Balaam's saddle-pony in all the vast vegetable and animal collection." Or this: "The Conservatives of Richmond, Va., have nominated Judge Robert Ould to represent them in their coming white man's assembly. The South is at last learning wisdom. Any ragamuffin will do for Congress; but fill our State Legislatures with our ablest, purest, noblest men. The blackest and kinkiest, gizzard-hoofed-est and stinkiest Guinea nigger is good enough for a Federal Senator; but let statesmen and patriots, the true sons of the Southland, do our home law-grinding."

A COLORED "GERMAN JOURNALIST."—The Philadelphia Ledger states that American journalism will be represented at the Hamburg assembly of German journalists by a colored editor and newspaper proprietor from St. Louis, Mo. He will probably be the first colored journalist ever seen in Europe. As a colored "German journalist" he will be a greater stranger still.

An Incendiary Cat.

A shocking accident occurred at Jessup, Buchanan county, Saturday, by the freak of a cat. In the evening, between 5 and 7 o'clock, Mrs. Shultz, who lives in the town, was sitting quietly at home, in a chair, beside a table in the dining-room, whereon stood an ordinary kerosene lamp, lighted and burning. While Mrs. Shultz thus sat engaged in some pleasant household duty, the household cat, which had been making herself troublesome to get something to eat, sprang upon the table, and, on being driven away, made a lunge to reach the floor near the corner of the table where the lady sat, and struck the lamp as she passed, knocking it over on to the carpet. The bowl of the lamp containing the oil was bursted in the fall, loosing the inflammable liquid upon the carpet, which took fire from the burning wick. Mrs. Shultz tried to quench the flames, and in the attempt her clothes took fire. She screamed for help and tried to tear the burning garments from her body, and members of the family and others who who were attracted into the house by the noise, made frantic endeavors to kill the fire, but before it was done the poor woman was so horribly burned that her life is despaired of. Some parts of her body were nearly roasted, and she suffered the most exquisite agony. —Dubuque Herald.

A Venerable Blade.

There is an ancient sword on exhibition at the office of the Providence Journal which was made in the year 1616, making it 257 years old. It was worn with honor by Capt. Abijah Moore, who commanded a company in a Vermont regiment, under Gen. Starke, in the Revolutionary war. Capt. Moore inherited the sword from his grandfather Elisha Moore, who was killed by the Indians in 1754, with all his family except one son, who escaped, at the settlement where Burlington, Vt., now stands. The house was sacked and burned, and, with other property, the Indians carried away this sword, but the blade was afterward captured, the stolen sword recovered and returned to the son who escaped, and has since been in the family as an heirloom, and handed down from generation to generation. At present it belongs to Mrs. Charles S. Westland, of Providence, a direct descendant from the Capt. Abijah Moore above named.

How To Make Garments Water-Proof.

A communication to an English paper gives the following recipe for making Scotch tweed water-proof:

"In a bucket of soft water put half-a-pound of sugar of lead, and half-a-pound of powdered alum; stir this, at intervals, until it becomes clear, then pour it off into another bucket, and put the garment therein, and let it be in for twenty-four hours, and then hang it up to dry without wringing it. Two of my party—a lady and a gentleman—have worn garments thus treated in the wildest storms of wind and rain, without getting wet. The rain hangs upon the cloth in globules. In short, they are really water-proof."

No Uncertain Sound.—When a man discovers a great truth, it is his duty to proclaim it to his fellow man. The use of Dr. Walker's Vinegar Bitters cannot be too strongly recommended to the invalid public. To those who have tried it, nothing need be said—their experience is their proof, pure and positive as Holy Writ. To those who have not tried it, these truths cannot be too often repeated. It is a certain vegetable specific, which aids faltering nature against the triumphs of dyspepsia, bilious disorders of every kind, malarious fevers, constipation of the bowels, liver complaint, Spring and Fall debility, etc., etc. It costs but little, and can always be at hand. It is the poor man's friend. It saves a doctor's bill, and the time lost in riding five, ten or twenty miles after him; besides being free from all the poisonous medicaments of the pharmacopœia. It will not stimulate you today to leave you weaker to-morrow. Its benefits are permanent.—[Com.

The "Science of Health."—The Science of Health aims not at deep scientific and medical instruction, but at those minor pieces of information which are so useful to be known, and so difficult of access anywhere else. Its contents for the present number present a series of articles upon "Sickly Country Girls;" "Disease and Its Treatment;" "Piano Pummeling;" "The Health of Our Children at School;" "Pain or No Pain;" "The Woman Doctor;" "The Two Quacks;" "How to Make a Good Medical Journal;" "Diseased Liver and Suicide;" "Calico;" "Emergencies;"—all good and useful articles. The other departments are: Pacific Department, Household and Agricultural, Timely Topics, Talks with Correspondents, Voices of the People. Published by Samuel R. Wells, New York.

We often see a large stock of cattle which do not seem to thrive, and come out "spring poor," all for want of something to start them in the right direction. One dollar's worth of Sheridan's Cavalry Condition Powders, given to such a stock occasionally during the winter, would be worth more than an extra half ton of hay.—[Com.

In Wood's Household Magazine for November, the table of contents seems spread for a Thanksgiving feast, and gives evidence that no efforts have been spared that could add to its excellence. "A Sermon on a Skimmer" is not only pleasing in its quaintness and originality, but contains sound logic. "Mrs. Pomeroy's Pin Money" is capital. "Upon the Stand" is another meritorious sketch by the popular writer, Kate W. Hamilton. "Codfish and Potatoes," by Eleanor Kirk, is a short serial which opens well. "Growing Aged Together," by the Rev. Robert Collyer, is well worth the price of the year's subscription; it is full of this great man's eloquence—powerful in its very simplicity. There are many other interesting articles had we space to mention them. The poetry in this number is unusually good. A new feature of the magazine is the introduction of pictures, and the illustration "Past, Present and Future," here given, is exceedingly pretty.

Price of Magazine, one dollar per year—with the chromo "Yosemite," one dollar and a half. Address Wood's Household Magazine, Newburgh, N. Y.

"Phrenological Journal."—This magazine continues to keep up its credit as an enterprising and instructive monthly. Its articles are generally such as awaken interest among readers. They are thoughtful, without being heavy, and convey information in that attractive form which makes a deeper impression upon the casual reader than the lengthened and more elaborate treatise of the scholar. The following is a list of contents: "The Welsh, or the Briton, the Inspirational Race;" "Our Immortality;" "Hamlet, a Psychological Study;" "Growth in Character and Heart;" "Conversation About Faces," illustrated; "The Enrollment Act," reminiscences; "Money," its function and requirements; "Letters from the South," 5; "Application of Art to Dress;" "Wives Who Henpeck;" "Prison Life in Prussia;" "Address to Young Men;" "The Late Panic; "Premature Development;" "The Love of Nature;" "Nothing New Under the Sun." Subscription price, $3 a year. Address Samuel R. Wells, 389 Broadway, New York.

The "Little Corporal."—The November number of this popular magazine for boys and girls presents an attractive table of contents that cannot fail to interest and instruct the little folks: "Aunt Rusha's Boy," Story of a "Grizzly Bear," "Hidden Treasure" (chap. IX), "How to Become Great," "My Riches" (poem), "Life on an Island" (chap. V.), "The Born Artist," "Maud's Thanksgiving," "Sue's Thanksgiving" (poem), "Claud and the Little Birds," "In the Woods," "Grandmother's Diplomacy" (poem), "Almost a Discovery," "Our Little Dog Dickie," "Vespers" (poem), "Our Defeat at Waterloo," "The Giant Ship," "All for the Best," (poem), etc., etc. The Little Corporal is one of the very best children's periodicals extant, and is furnished at the extremely low price of $1.50 a year. Published by John E. Miller, 164 Randolph street, Chicago.

VINEGAR BITTERS
PURELY VEGETABLE
FREE FROM ALCOHOL
OU
DR. WALKER'S CALIFORNIA
EUREKA
VINEGAR BITTERS

Dr. J. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters are a purely Vegetable preparation, made chiefly from the native herbs found on the lower ranges of the Sierra Nevada mountains of California, the medicinal properties of which are extracted therefrom without the use of Alcohol. The question is almost daily asked, "What is the cause of the unparalleled success of Vinegar Bitters?" Our answer is, that they remove the cause of disease, and the patient recovers his health. They are the great blood purifier and a life-giving principle, a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the system. Never before in the history of the world has a medicine been compounded possessing the remarkable qualities of Vinegar Bitters in healing the sick of every disease man is heir to. They are a gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver and Visceral Organs, in Bilious Diseases.

The properties of Dr. Walker's Vinegar Bitters are Aperient, Diaphoretic, Carminative, Nutritious, Laxative, Diuretic, Sedative, Counter-Irritant, Sudorific, Alterative, and Anti-Bilious.

Grateful Thousands proclaim Vinegar Bitters the most wonderful Invigorant that ever sustained the sinking system.

No Person can take these Bitters according to directions, and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and vital organs wasted beyond repair.

Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, which are so prevalent in the valleys of our great rivers throughout the United States, especially those of the Mississippi, Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, Tennessee, Cumberland, Arkansas, Red, Colorado, Brazos, Rio Grande, Pearl, Alabama, Mobile, Savannah, Roanoke, James, and many others, with their vast tributaries, throughout our entire country during the Summer and Autumn, and remarkably so during seasons of unusual heat and dryness, are invariably accompanied by extensive derangements of the stomach and liver, and other abdominal viscera. In their treatment, a purgative, exerting a powerful influence upon these various organs, is essentially necessary. There is no cathartic for the purpose equal to Dr. J. Walker's Vinegar Bitters, as they will speedily remove the dark-colored viscid matter with which the bowels are loaded, at the same time stimulating the secretions of the liver, and generally restoring the healthy functions of the digestive organs.

Fortify the body against disease by purifying all its fluids with Vinegar Bitters. No epidemic can take hold of a system thus fore-armed.

Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the region of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia. One bottle will prove a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement.

Scrofula, or King's Evil, White Swellings, Ulcers, Erysipelas, Swelled Neck, Goitre, Scrofulous Inflammations, Indolent Inflammations, Mercurial Affections, Old Sores, Eruptions of the Skin, Sore Eyes, etc. In these, as in all other constitutional Diseases, Walker's Vinegar Bitters have shown their great curative powers in the most obstinate and intractable cases.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism, Gout, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have no equal. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood.

Mechanical Diseases.—Persons engaged in Paints and Minerals, such as Plumbers, Type-setters, Gold-beaters, and Miners, as they advance in life, are subject to paralysis of the Bowels. To guard against this, take a dose of Walker's Vinegar Bitters occasionally.

For Skin Diseases, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt-Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ring-worms, Scald-head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters.

Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. No system of medicine, no vermifuges, no anthelminitics will free the system from worms like these Bitters.

For Female Complaints, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood, or the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters display so decided an influence that improvement is soon perceptible.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions, or Sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul; your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure, and the health of the system will follow.

CONSUMPTION
And Its Cure.
WILLSON'S
Carbolated Cod Liver Oil

Is a scientific combination of two well-known medicines. Its theory is first to arrest the decay, then build up the system. Physicians find the doctrine correct. The really startling cures performed by Willson's Oil are proof.

Carbolic Acid positively arrests Decay. It is the most powerful antiseptic in the known world. Entering into the circulation, it at once grapples with corruption, and decay ceases. It purifies the sources of disease.

Cod Liver Oil is Nature's best assistant in resisting Consumption.

Put up in large wedge-shaped bottles, bearing the inventor's signature, and is sold by the best Druggists. Prepared by

ELEVEN ENTIRELY NEW SIZES.
WM. RESOR & CO., Cincinnati.

The Auburn Courier

Thursday, Nov. 20, 1873.

The gold coinage of the United States mint, Philadelphia, in October, was $11,000,000 in double eagles.—The gold weighed thirty eight tons.

Sidney Webster is the name of Don Hamilton Fish's son in law. Mr. Webster is the agent for the Spanish Government in New York.

A regular system of robbery is said to prevail on the Pacific railway trains Evans Rodgers and wife, on arriving at Salt Lake Sunday, discovered that they were minus $2,700 in gold.

The army estimates for the coming year amount in the aggregate to the enormous sum of $56,330,000. The increase over last year is $13,646,000. So you see we are getting quite economical.

The victors in Wisconsin have been Jollifying. Well they may. The triumph is a great one. That State has invariably been Radical, giving Grant at the Presidential election 18,000 majority. One of the pleasing features of the result is the retiring of the notorious Matt. Carpenter.

The majority for Taylor, the Democratic and Farmer Grange candidate for Govenor of Wisconsin, is more than 15,000. This is a splendid result for a State which gave over 18-000 majority last year for President. Is there anybody who is foolish enough to suppose that this does not mean a revolution, and was alone accomplished by stay-at-home Republicans?

Don Hamilton Fish causes it to be telegraphed over the country that the Administration is anxious that our people refrain from demonstrations which may embarrass it during its present correspondence with the Spanish Government. Any demonstration on behalf of the Cubans and toward the possession of that island by this Government is calculated to embarrass Mr. Fish and his son-in-law.

The Brittish Government after being slapped in the face does'nt wait to be kicked. It has discovered that one of the Vrginius captives was a British subject, and has instructed its Council at Havana and Santiago de Cuba to look after him. The unfortunate Briton has doubtless transferred his allegiance to some other power ere this. If so, we are likely to have Mr. Bull's aid in taming the pestiferous Spaniard.

A special dispatch from Washington concerning the Cuban imbroglio encourages us to believe "that efforts will be made to impart a more humane character to the contest." When scores of men are butchered on the battlefield by the hot blooded Spaniard, when prisoners are shot like dogs, when tropical atrocities are sending a feeling of horror over the world, it is cheerful to learn that "efforts will be made to impart a more humane character to the contest."

It is well established that the Virginius was not in Spanish waters at the time of her capture, and was, therefore, beyond Spanish jurisdiction. She was near the British coast of Jamaica, therefore her condemnation by the Spanish authorities and the shooting of those on board of her was nothing more or less than an act of piracy. It is not such an act as can be apologized for or explained. The dead cannot be restored. There is just one way of the Spanish Government paying for it, and that is by the loss of the island of Cuba.

Now that the full force of the effect of the great crash in monetary affairs is being felt in all parts of the land. the people want Morton to rise and explain why he said in the late campaign that "the financial administration of the Republican party has given to the country stability and confidence. Under its rule, the business men of the nation count with confidence upon the years to come and know what they may reasonably look for, and enterprise leaps forward as it never did before." Just how "enterprise leaps forward" at the present time is not so easily perceivable.

The cruisers of the Virginius were probably engaged in sowing the wind. They reaped a Torando.

The war excitement is raging.

The Democratic City Treasurer of Fort Wayne cannot account for $6,-000 he received, and has been impeached for passing a fraudlent official bond on the City Council, yet we do not even hear a yelp, much less a growl, from the Democratic or the "Independent" press. This would not have been thus, were the official a member of the radical party that has ruined the country.—Northern Indianian.

Unfortunately the "official," though a Democrat, was also placed upon the Republican ticket. And though his crime is none the less, Republicans, as well as Democrats, are responsible.

The way the present Cuban excitement originated is this: Week before last the Spanish war steamer Tornado cruising about the edge of Cuban waters, discovered a vessel headed for some port in the south part of Cuba. This craft proved to be the Virginius, of fillbustering notoriety, but which on this occasion is claimed to have regular clearance papers from Kingston, (Jamaica,) and to have borne the American flag. Among the passenengers were Gens, Verona, Cespedes, Del Sol, and and Ryan (an American Irishman) all Cuban in surgents, or "patriots," just as we may regard them, who wese captured, taken to Santiago de Cuba, and summarily shot.

As Thanksgiving day will soon be along, Nast ought to draw an engraving representing Grant and thieves of the Forty-second Congress on their knees, with their faces turned devoutly to Heaven, and an envelope sticking out of their side coat pockets, showing in figures how much each one bad stolen, and how much he had to be thankful for; and when they got through they could have an experience meeting, and adjourn it into a mutual admiration society. We know Nast would do this if he only thought of it. He could call it the Sacred Engraving; but it looks a goed deal like mockery for a man with $100,000 of stolen money in his pockets ordering his fellow-citizens to thank God for the blessings of life which they have honestly earned.

The Cincinnati Enquirer remarks that the Democratic party has been pronounced upon by high political authority to be dead. Now this dead party just at present has the Governor and Legislature of Connecticut. It has the state officers of New York with all the patronage of the Canal Board, and a Governor in New Jersey It has the Governor and Legislature of Delaware; ditto Maryland, Virginia and West Virginia. In Virginia it gains a United States Senator. In North Carolina it has the Legislature In Georgia both Legislature and Gevernor. In Ohio the same Ditto Kentucky and Tennessee. It has the Legislature in Texas and the Governor in Indiana. It has the Governor and Legislature in Missouri. It nas the Governor and Legislature in Missouri. It has the Governor and Legislature in Wisconsin. In connection with other elements of oppositien it will control the Legislature of Kansas and California. Four or five years ago it had scarcely a Governor or Legislature in the Union and now it will run from one third to nearly one half of them. While the Democratic party is not dead there is another party which appears to be very unwell.

Repeal the Salary Bill.

Repeal the law—every word and figure of it that applies to the increase of salaries. The people demand that this shall be done. And then let Mr. Grant, drawing $25,000 a year legitimate salary, and a free White House and $77,000 in addition yearly to support it, sue the masses of his countrymen, out of work and out of bread, for the additional $25,000 he covets if he will. Congress will reassemble two weeks from today, with its each and every member having $5,625 of the people's money in his pocket for services that he did not render during the past nine months—$25 dropping into his hands every day from the sweat and toil of industry, and with a President whose pay and perquisites since the 4th of march last have been over $4000 a day, while the wolf is at the door of the millions of the poor from whom this money is wrenched by Federal taxation and Federal taxgathers. Repeal of the salary bill without hesitation or qualification, and political damnation of every man who voted for or officially approved the measure, or took the tainted money flowing from it—this is the demand, and this the decree of the people. It is the duty of the press to warn and direct the public opinion that can and will secure compliance with the one and enforce the other.

Sheriff Meese advertises a considerable amount of real estate for sale.—Press.

And about all of it seems to be nearer Waterloo than Auburn.

Mr. Kline, formerly of Corunna, has been renovating the property on Third street, near Rainier Hotel, thoroughly, and will occupy it for the present.

Last fall a heavy snow fell on the 16th of November, and there was continuous sleighing from that time until sometime in March.

Saucers are covered and used for redingote buttons by some of the ladies of this city. It is expected that dinner plates will soon be used.

Messrs Moss & Huffman, Attorneys at Law, Butler, Indiana, are now ready to attend to all business in Law, Collections and Real Estate entrusted to their care.

G. W. Gordon has moved his Gallery to Case's building, third story, door to the right, where he has every facility for making good pictures.

Now, when you go into a business house don't forget to shut the door. This is the time of the year when it is natural for people to keep their doors closed.

Simon Snyder opened his new Livery Stable last week at the Swineford House, and is now ready to meet all demands upon him with good rigs.

The building season is about closed for the present, but when the vernal season comes again we expect to see Auburn extend one mile further south.

We are kept pretty busy with work notwithstanding the dull times, but our facilities are first class and we are prepared to do any kind of printing you may want.

Our subscribers should bear in mind that the present hard times puts us in want of our two dollars that they owe us. Its a small matter to you, and a large one to us.

The following sentence, found in the report of the Teachers' Institute, is troubling the grammarians of Huntington counny:

"As a primary instructor she is thoroughly mistress of her profession."

Is it correct?

The only applications for permits to sell liquor, at the next session of the County Board, will come from Waterloo, we believe.—Press.

We award our neighbor all the praise due on this score.

We ask our country readers to aid us in extending our circulation among the families of the county. The COURIER ought to be taken by every family regardless of politics or religion. We give the local news and that is what the men, women and children want.

One of our pious young men was surprised, the other evening, in finding a linen coat, with sticks in the arms and a neat little head made of a comforter lying in his bed. Being a little afraid, he called in a neighbor, who, on seeing the image, screamed at the top of her voice: "Why, la me, its our Jane.

Soon we shall be blessed with the season of festivals, sleigh-riding, mince pies, frozen ham, skating, hog killing, snow, hail, overshoes, flannel shirts, great coats, cold fingers, shivering frames, besides a number of smaller joys, not enumerated above, and for which we are commanded to be thankful. And for all of which let us be thankful.

William Baxter, author of the temperance law, is lecturing in this part of the State. Couldn't his services be procured in this county?—Press.

Charley Baxter is signing petitions for liquor licenses. Could not his services be procured in this town?

TIME CALLED.

Notice is hereby given to those indebted to the estate of W. W. Humes that Judgement must be made immediately or the law will be brought into requisition upon all those who will not respond without delay.

The Bryan Democrat says: "Edgerton is no longer the half-way house on the Air Line Road. The completion of the Eel River Road to Butler, and its connection with the L. S. & M. S. Road, makes that village the half-way house, and consequently the coal yards, smith shops, wheel tappers, etc., will be removed there after this week.'

If some of our young ladies who spend a large share of their time in promenading the streets, would devote the same amount of time to advocating a festival for the benefit of the poor, a great deal of good might result from it. Even a load of wood or a sack of flour, donated to some one who needs it, would be very kindly received. And, if we are not mistaken, there are several places that could be made happy in this direction. Try it, girls, boys, and everybody.

The hollidays will soon be here, and already our dealers are making their purchases of goods for that season of the year. Remember that judicious advertising always pays, but now more than ever, in the way of announcing the extra inducements which nearly all dealers offer at this time. The COURIER office is at all times prepared to fill all orders for cards, circulars, posters, &c., and its columns are the best advertising medium in this part of the country.

The Press says: The versatile cuss who edits the Courier writes communications abusing the agricultural association, and then replies to them from Jackson township.

This is not extending much encouragement to our Jackson township correspondent. His friendship for Waterloo does not seem to be appreciated.

"Though I am out of work, I must have something to cover my feet," said a mechanic. "Where are you going?" asked his wife. "Up town to get a pair of boots or shoes," he answered. "John, won't you get me a pair of shoes?" said his wife coaxingly. "Yes. I know that E. Vordermark & Sons have just the thing for you, and, though these are hard times, I will buy you a pair of shoes and do without myself," John replied. "Perhaps I can buy us both a pair for little money, for they sell cheap," he continued. And he did. **

The Excursion.

A large train filled with the Toledo Board of Trade, City Council, and business men of Toledo passed through Auburn last Tuesday on an excursion to Logansport, and returned yesterday, after a most pleasant visit. We accompanied the excursion but have not time this week to give full particulars, which will appear next week.

The rudimental singing class will meet next Saturday night at the school house, and all are invited to attend.

Full proceedings of the Teachers' Institute last week, will be found in this paper, commencing on the 1st, and concluding on the 5th page.

J. S. Bird & Co., of Jackson, will publish a fine map of Auburn, if our citizens generally subscribe for a copy. We need such a map, our interests demand it, and we hope the above gentlemen will meet with success.

Mr. W. B. Hornish, fashionable tailor presents his compliments to the citizens of Auburn and the many readers of the COURIER. From long experience he hopes to be able to please and gratify every taste. All work warranted. Shop one door west of the Swineford Hotel.

During the Institute one of our teachers called at a private residence for the purpose of informing one of her pupils to attend a recitation in grammar before that august body. Just before leaving she said. "Be sure and bring your five senses along," when the mother of the juvenile anxiously asked: "What is the five cents for? I've been swindled enough lately.

Though it is hardly in season now to talk about corn planters, yet it is well to be advised even at this early day, as to the most popular kind now in use. The Smith Ohio Corn Planter took the first premium at our fair, and is regarded by our farmers generally as the best in use. G. D. McGowan, our excellent farmer friend, residing about four miles east of town, has been appointed agent for this planter, and farmers generally should make a note of this.

Warsaw has been sold, as was Huntington a few weeks ago. This is the way it was done: A well dressed individual called on the Sheriff and disclosed the startling intelligence that the Iowa railroad robbers intended robbing the Warsaw bank, and he, as one of them, was sent ahead to work up the job. He got ten dollars from the Sheriff, to pay expenses, and left, to turn up on the night of the robbery. The Sheriff marshaled his army around the bank on the night for the robbery, but neither robbers nor the well dressed young man put in an appearance.

The members of the Institute and our citizens generally were regaled with a fine recitation by Prof W N Hull, of Pittsburg at the M E Church last evening—The recitations consisted of pathetic and humorous poems the proper rendition of which required a practice as varied as it was difficult The Prof met each emergency with a versatility seldom equaled by our best elocutionsts, and entertained his large audience to their utmost satisfaction Mr Hull has added largely to the interest of the present session of the Institute, and we cannot but approve of the excellent taste displayed in securing his services

Friday morning, lesson in map drawing. On motion, a unanimous vote of thanks was given to Mr. Hull, for ceaseless and untiring labors in the Institute. By his pleasing manners, and the earnest interest he took in the welfare, not only of the Institute itself, but of its individual members, Mr. Hull attached himself to all with whom he came in contact. The work of Friday was somewhat general in its character. T. C. Mays, of the COURIER, opened the columns of his paper for the establishment of an educational department, to be in charge of J. A. Barns. A resolution to that effect was adopted. Remarks on Text Books, by the Superintendent. A resolution favoring compulsory attendance at school was passed. Resolved, That we as teachers, have been highly benefited by our attendance at the sessions of this Institute: that we will reduce to practice the valuable suggestions of the various instructors, and that we will go forth to our labors with a renewed purpose, to do our whole duty, and make the world the better for our having lived in it.

J. S. OTIS, } Committee.
C. E. EMANUEL

In the evening, the contest in reading was a very spirited one, and furnished a rare treat for all present. The Judges, T. C. Mays, Rev. Fisher and J. E. Rose found it difficult to decide as to which of the four, namely, Miss L. Daniels, Miss M. Schoonover, Miss Hattie Griswold or Miss M. Keeran, the prize should be awarded, but finally decided in favor of Miss Griswold, who received the diploma, handsomely illustrated in Mr. Hull's best style of ornamental penmanship.

The choir, composed of the following persons, Misses Emma Ford, Josie Rush Frances Stahl, Alice Widney, Cyrelia Widney, Messers. A. R. Huffman, M. Long and S. Starrett, received many and deserved compliments from not only the teachers of our county, but those from other parts of the State.

All in all, the Institute has been the most successful ever assembled in DeKalb county, both in point of numbers and interest. Over one hundred were enrolled, the first day, and two hundred and eleven in all. It is a matter of doubt whether its equal has ever been seen in Indiana.

NEWS SUMMARY.

The East.

THERE are in New York 40,000 people compulsorily idle—people who would be glad to work and earn food, clothing, coals and shelter. So says the New York Herald....The creditors of A. & W. Sprague have accepted the proposition of the firm for an extension, and the affairs of the immense corporation are now in the hands of three trustees....Center, the Stokes juror who, while the case was pending, made a practice of rambling about the city nights in the care of a Deputy-Sheriff, visiting dram-shops and talking pretty freely about the case, has been sentenced to thirty days' imprisonment and to pay a fine of $250. ....Laura Keene, the famous actress, died in New York, last week, at an advanced age.... A man named Wade was hung for murder at Williamsport, Pa., on Friday, the 5th inst. The telegraph thus records how the wicked wretch met his death: The rope being too long, his feet struck squarely on the ground. In this position he remained, shouting, "Oh Lord, have mercy." The rope came off his neck, and his body fell over heavily on the ground. He was carried upon the scaffold, and after a long delay in arranging the rope, the drop was again pulled. He fell this time less than three feet. His pulse continued to beat for seven minutes. After hanging twenty-seven minutes he was placed in a coffin and taken charge of by his friends. Many pieces of the rope were cut off and carried away as relics by the spectators. Wade told his jailer to "hurry up, as he had an appointment to dine in hell with the devil at 2." He said the only thing troubling him was "whether the people whom he murdered were in heaven or hell."

UPWARD of 30,000 workingmen have been thrown out of employment this fall in Philadelphia alone....A Grange has been established in Elizabeth, N. J....At a meeting of the Pennsylvania Railroad Directors, the other day, a five per cent. scrip dividend, redeemable in March, 1875, was declared. Tom Scott, Vice-President, tendered his resignation, but it was not accepted.

THE strike of the bricklayers in New York has seriously embarrassed building operations....Six hundred men were discharged from the Brooklyn Navy Yard last week.... The trial of the man Udderzook, at West Chester, Pa., has resulted in a verdict of guilty of murder in the first degree. It will be remembered that this is the case where a man was murdered to secure the large sum for which his life was insured, the circumstances constituting a criminal romance that the most daring writers of fiction have scarcely surpassed. The evidence against the accused was purely circumstantial....A horrible double tragedy was enacted at Monongahela City, Pa., a few days ago. An old man named John Clemens made a will disinheriting his son James, which so enraged the young man that he went to a butcher-shop, obtained a knife and murdered his aged parent, completely disemboweling him. The parricide then plunged the knife into his own breast, severing his heart in twain....The Kelsey mystery continues to agitate the people of Long Island, N. Y. The grand jury has indicted a number of persons for the murder of Kelsey, and some of them are in prison, bail being refused.

A FIRE at Springfield, Mass., on the 10th inst., destroyed $230,000 worth of railroad property....Boston has been celebrating the anniversary of its great fire. Much of the destroyed part of the city has been substantially rebuilt....Bettershall & Co., heavy tea merchants of New York, have failed....Jay Cooke & Co. have made a proposition to pay 15 per cent. in money and the remainder in Pacific railroad bonds....Tom Scott declares that no more bills of the Texas and Pacific Construction Company will be allowed to go to protest.

THE singular Kelsey case of Long Island, N. Y., is as far from solution as ever. The parties arrested on a charge of having murdered the missing man have been discharged, the grand jury having failed to find any bill against them....Two Pittsburgh banks suspended last week. It is said depositors will be paid in full....A boiler exploded with frightful effect at the corner of Fourth avenue and One Hundred and Twentieth street, New York, on the morning of the 11th inst. Seven persons were instantly killed and several wounded. All of the killed had either the whole, or a portion, of their heads blown off. The boiler was in charge of a boy 13 years of age, who had been allowed to act as engineer to the peril of scores of lives. The boiler exploded with terrible noise, and an instant afterward, as the dust and debris cleared away, the ground was seen to be strewn with bodies of the dead and wounded horribly torn and mutilated.

THE bankruptcy proceedings against Jay Cooke & Co. have been postponed to Nov. 27.

The West.

THE Chicago Industrial Exposition closed on Monday, the 10th inst. In every respect it has proved a grand success....A branch mint will probably be established at Chicago.... John W. Young, the money-order forger, has been convicted at Chicago, and sentenced to three years in the Penitentiary....Vast deposits of iron and coal have been discovered in Southern Utah....Ex-Gov. James, of Nebraska, has been indicted for malfeasance in office....George Hopkins and Mr. Bailey, of Henry county, Mo., met by chance, the other day, and settled an old feud by killing each other. Both were respectable citizens.... The extensive livery-stable of James H. Thornton, in St. Louis, has been destroyed by fire. Loss, $100,000....At Detroit, a few nights ago, a young man, named Henderson, on his way home from a night's carouse, stopped at the house of Widow Lavine and demanded admittance. She fired a pistol through the window and shot him dead.... A severe shock of earthquake was felt in portions of California and Nevada on the 7th inst.

SERIOUS charges are made against Indian Commissioner Smith in connection with his sale of the Leach Lake pine lands, in Northern Minnesota....Owen O'Conor, of Dixon Ill., will spend the remainder of his life in prison, if not released by Executive interference, as a penalty for having murdered Dennis Allen....The Chicago and Alton road is to be prosecuted for violation of the Illinois Railroad law....Col. H. D. Cook, President of the Illinois Board of Railroad and Warehouse Commissioners, died at his residence in Normal on the 9th inst., aged 56 years....Fifty thousand dollars' worth of property was destroyed by a fire in Fort Wayne, Ind., on the 9th inst.

Two men charged with robbing the train on the Rock Island railroad, in Iowa, have been arrested at Wellington, Kansas....James H. Lucas, the wealthiest citizen of St. Louis, died on the 10th inst., from the effects of a paralytic stroke he received four years ago. He was 73 years old, and has left property estimated at from $8,000,000 to $10,000,000.

IN the three-ball billiard tournament at Chicago, the other day, Maurice Daly, of New York, made the unprecedented run of 153 points. ..Two negroes are under sentence of death for murder at Du Quoin, Ill....The Chicago Tribune, of the 13th inst., sums up the effect of the financial disturbance on the business interests of that city. The railroads, it states, have not felt the increase of business they expected from the foreign demand for grain, and, if the price of wheat continues to fall, will be in a bad condition, as their earnings will be small, and it is impossible to borrow any more money abroad. The banks are still doing business carefully, and look upon the news of financial distress in England as an additional warning. Provisions, dry goods, clothing, boots and shoes, and furniture are all reported to be selling slowly and at reduced prices. The jewelry and book businesses have suffered severely. Manufacturing of all kinds is restricted here as in every part of the country, and the workingmen are proportionately distressed.

HON. WILLIAM McGALLIARD, member of the Illinois Legislature, recently committed suicide by shooting himself. Cause, unrequited love....A dispatch from Victoria, British Columbia, says: "The steamer California arrived to-night from Sitka, Alaska Territory, and confirms the new and recent discovery of rich gold fields in Cassian county. She brought down twelve miners and $15,000 in dust. The excitement is intense. One party took out $197 in eight hours' rocking."... Capt. Brown, of the Fifth Cavalry, recently went on a scout in the Tonto Basin country, of Arizona, and killed forty-six Apaches....The reported arrest of two of the Iowa train robbers in Kansas was a hoax....An affray between soldiers and citizens in Bismarck, Minn., on the 11th inst., resulted in the killing of one soldier and one citizen....The gale on the night of Nov. 11 was the most fearful ever experienced on Lake Michigan. Many vessels were wrecked and a number of lives lost.

The South.

ALL accounts from the South represent that it is financially in a better condition than at any time since the war....In Loanoke county, Ark., near Little Rock, a few days ago, a posse consisting of an officer and three men, who were in search of two negro hog-thieves, were fired upon by a party of colored men who had espoused the cause of the thieves. Three of the posse were instantly killed, and the third mortally wounded....Gen. William J. Hardee, the well-known Confederate General, died at Wytheville, Va., on the 6th of November.

THE business of the East Tennessee and Virginia railroad is seriously paralyzed by a strike of the engineers, firemen and brakemen. The company has sued 200 of the strikers in the courts of Knoxville, Tenn., for $1,000,000 damages, and obtained an injunction restricting them from obstructing the business of the company.

A WACO (Texas) dispatch says the Indians along the Texas frontier are worse than at any time since the war. All of them are off their reservation, being headed by Big Tree, who was lately pardoned out of the Penitentiary. Over 7,000 lately crossed the Wichita, and are depredating on the settlers....R. M. T. Hunter, of Virginia, has written a letter, urging the United States to loan $500,000,000 to the South in 4 per cent thirty-year bonds, for which the planters are to pay 6 per cent, and give a first mortgage on their lands. Hunter says that Mr. Lincoln advocated this plan.... The widow of the late Gen. Robert E. Lee died at Lexington, Va., on the 4th inst.... Over 4,000 operatives have been thrown out of employment by the stoppage of mills and factories around the Louisville Falls....The yellow fever has entirely disappeared from the South.

THE Attorney-General and Deputy Marshal of the Western District of Texas were assassinated on the 25th of October by a desperado who had been convicted of murder and made his escape from prison.

CICALLA, the dishonest Acting Mayor of Memphis, has been unanimously expelled from the Board of Aldermen....S. S. Mallory, ex-United States Senator from Florida, and formerly Secretary of the Confederate States Navy, is dead.

Washington.

REV. MR. NEWMAN has forwarded to the Treasury Department a highly interesting report from Japan. Two of the most noticeable features in it are the production of iron by the Japanese which can be laid down in this country at a much cheaper price than English iron; and the extent to which tobacco is cultivated in Japan in place of rice, as being more profitable.

SECRETARY OF WAR BELKNAP, who is being married almost daily by the correspondents, denies that he has any matrimonial intentions for the present....Gen. Alfred Torbert, of Delaware, has been appointed Consul-General at Paris, vice J. Meredith Reed, who goes to Troy in place of Mr. Francis, the present Greek Minister.

IT is stated that the President will restate in his message the propriety of a free banking law....Secretary of the Interior Delano will, in his annual report, renew his recommendation for a census to be taken in 1875.

SECRETARY Fish has been interviewed on the subject of the Virginius and the Spanish executions at Santiago de Cuba. Mr. Fish said that his natural sympathies were with the Cuban cause, but that in his official position he could not act as a champion of oppressed humanity while unauthorized filibusters were using the United States ports to fit out expeditions, contrary to law and treaty. He stigmatizes the execution of Gen. Ryan and his comrades as an inhuman and atrocious slaughter, for which the Spanish volunteers, and not the home Government, are to blame. President Grant is credited with being in favor of an active protest against the outrage.

THE case of the Virginius was discussed at a Cabinet meeting on the 11th inst. No decision can be reached with regard to it till full official information has been received.

SENATOR MORTON is at the capital. He is reported in good health, and in favor of greenback relief....Brisbane is again laying down his pneumatic tube between the Capitol and and the Government Printing Office.

Foreign.

PRINCE BISMARCK has laid before the German Federal Council a proposition from the United States Government, inviting Germany to participate in the Philadelphia Centennial, and has recommended its acceptance....The apparently interminable Tichborne case has secured a fresh lease of life, an extension of time having been granted upon motion of the claimant's counsel to November, 1874....A vast amount of property has been destroyed in St. Petersburg by the overflowing of the river Neva.

M. BUFFET has been elected President of the French Assembly.....The rate of discount at the Bank of England has been raised to nine per cent. The French Ministry resigned in a body, the other day, but President MacMahon refused to accept their resignations....The Carlists are reputed to have achieved a great victory over the Government troops near Myranda del Arga. The Spanish Lieut.-Gen. De Rivera was killed....All the rivers in the Island of Jamaica recently rose to an unprecedented height, causing great destruction of life and property....London is threatened with a financial panic. There, it seems, shares of new diamond, gold and silver mines of the wildest description, securities of doubtful railroads, and bonds of tottering and rotten governments, were taken with avidity, and in amounts that were astonishing. The Continent has suffered from the collapse of these schemes, and now London is feeling the pressure. It is estimated that the shrinkage in that city of the securities mentioned has been at least one billion dollars within the past year.

BISMARCK has been reinstated as President of the Prussian Ministry....Ex-President Thiers expresses the belief that the hopes of the Monarchists in France have been completely dissipated, and that a Conservative Republic is assured....The inherent savagery of the Spanish character has received another illustration. A Havana dispatch states that all the insurgent prisoners captured in the recent fight near Puerto Principe—eighty in number—were shot on the field of battle by order of the Spanish commander....The reported Carlist victory near Miranda del Arga, Spain, is denied....Monday, the 10th of November, was a day of public rejoicing over the adoption of the constitutional amendments. The most important of these are those which abolish peonage and the separation of Church and State.

AN extensive plot in favor of the Count de Paris has been discovered in Paris, and it is said that the authorities are in possession of documents by which a number of well-known politicians are compromised. It is also reported that a deputation of Monarchists is about to proceed to Oulsburg to request the Count de Chambord to abdicate his claims to the throne of France in favor of the Count de Paris....Abd El Kader, the famous Arabian chieftain, is dead.

The committee on the prolongation of MacMahon's term has decided that the law prolonging his powers becomes a part of the Constitution after the constitutional bills are voted upon....Serious home-rule riots are reported in Kilkenny, Ireland. ....A report comes from Bayonne, Spain, that the Carlists have defeated the Republicans in another great battle, the latter losing 1,300 men.

Political.

IN the Wisconsin Legislature the Reformers will have a majority of 15 or 16 on joint ballot. ....Hon. William R. Taylor, the Governor-elect of Wisconsin, has been for twenty-five years a farmer in Dane county, near Madison. He is a native of New England, and about 55 years old....The Boston Journal puts the new Massachusetts Senate at 17 Republicans, 14 Democrats, and 1 Independent Democrat, and the Assembly at 71 Republicans, 56 Democrats, and 1 Independent Republican.

THE Republicans have carried Mississippi by a majority of 25,000 or 30,000, and secured both branches of the Legislature....Carl Schurz has been interviewed by a Washington correspondent. He expressed himself well satisfied with the relative prosperity and discretion of America. He says that Austria is rotten, France haggard, Spain hopeless, and North Germany debauched with the sudden influx of money....The Chicago Tribune's Washington correspondent telegraphs: "A review of the situation appears to indicate proffers of renewed consideration to the Liberal Republicans, Sumner, Schurz, etc., by the regulars, in order to stave off a Bourbon reaction. Mr. Sumner retains no ill-feeling for any of his fellow Senators with whom he was embroiled, but persistently refuses to have any relations with the President."....Andy Johnson is preparing a vigorous reply to Judge Holt.

The majority of Davis, for Governor, is about 6,000.

ELEVEN women were elected as School Superintendents in Illinois at the recent county elections....It is now definitely stated that the new party in Wisconsin will have one majority in the Senate and 18 majority in the House. Taylor's majority for Governor is about 15,000.

General.

THE political crisis in the Canadian Parliament has ended in the defeat of the Government. The Macdonald Ministry have resigned and a new Cabinet formed, with Sir Alexander Mackenzie as Premier.... The St. Louis Times prints a letter from Chihuahua in corroboration of the main points of the statement made by the Times some time ago concerning a project to conquer and annex the Northern States of Mexico to the United States, by forming into an army the laborers on Tom Scott's Texas Pacific railroad when discharged on the completion of that work. The letter further states that the belief in this project has become general, and has unsettled feeling in Chihuahua; that the agents of Scott and his associates have been traversing that State in every direction during the past year, collecting information and making topographical reconnoissances.

THE steamer Bavaria, bound from Hamilton to Montreal, was recently burned on Lake Ontario, 33 miles from Toronto. Twenty-two of the crew and passengers were rescued, and it is supposed that fourteen are lost.... The Governors of nearly all the States have ratified the President's proclamation designating Nov. 27 as a day of thanksgiving and prayer.

MACKENZIE, the new Canadian Premier, has formed his Cabinet, the leading members of which are: Mackenzie, Premier and Minister of Public Works; Blake, without a portfolio; Christie, Secretary of State; Cartwright, Minister of Finance; and D. A. Macdonald, Postmaster-General. Sir John Macdonald will be the leader of the new Opposition. Parliament was prorogued immediately upon the assumption by the new Ministry of the reins of government....The United States steamer Tuscarora, which has been making soundings in the Pacific ocean for a cable from San Francisco to China and Japan, found a submarine mountain 1,000 feet in height. The steamer sounded for a distance of 1,100 miles, the deepest soundings being 2,443 fathoms, or over two miles and a half.... The capture of the privateer Virginius by the Spanish steamer Tornado has had a bloody sequel. The Spanish authorities, in cruel haste and without awaiting instructions from Madrid, which eventually came a day too late, executed four of the passengers, among them Gen. Ryan, the American adventurer, who has for a long time been identified with the struggle for Cuban independence, and who not long since enlisted men in New York for that purpose. A strong pressure is being brought to bear upon the Government at Washington to interfere....Two hundred and one thousand five hundred and twelve emigrants arrived in the United States during the last three months, of which number there came from England, 29,216; Ireland, 45,979; Scotland, 5,639; Wales, 473; Isle of Man, 2; Jersey Island, 11; total from British Isles, 81,320. From Germany, 61,157; Austria, 2,637; Sweden, 7,109 Norway, 10,904; Denmark, 3,482; Netherlands, 2,627.

A SERIOUS collision occurred on the Grand Trunk railway, near Brantford, Canada, on the 9th inst., resulting in the death of one and the wounding of seven passengers....As might have been expected, the effect of the murder of Gen. Ryan and his associates on board the Virginius has been to fire the Cuban heart to white heat. Two expeditions are enrolling in New York, which are claimed to number already 2,000 and 3,000 respectively—the former being composed of American sympathizers and the latter of Cubans. The sum of $13,000 has been raised in that city to defray the cost of retaliation. Mass meetings are to be held to renew the agitation for a recognition of Cuban independence by our Government, and, altogether, the Cuban cause has received a new and powerful impulse from the cruelty of the Spanish authorities.

THE missing Anchor Line steamship Ismalia has been given up as lost. She sailed from New York for Glasgow with a heavy cargo and a few passengers on the 29th of September. The vessel and cargo were valued at $500,000. ....A fire at Stayner, Ontario, on the 11th inst., destroyed $200,000 worth of property.

SURFACE WATER.—Of surface waters Prof. Newbury observes: There is much apprehension in the public mind in regard to the purity of the water of streams which drain the surface of our own and other countries. Water in itself is a disinfectant, and a large volume exposed to the air, so rapidly "fines" itself by the oxidation of its organic impurities, that when cooled and settled or filtered to remove its suspended ingredients, the water of most of our streams is even more palatable and wholesome than that taken from wells.

SPANISH BUTCHERIES.

Fifty-three More of the Virginius' Passengers Murdered—The Feeling at Washington—The Government Thoroughly Aroused—Naval Preparations.

The feeling of distress and indignation that followed the execution of four of the passengers of the Virginius will be deepened into universal horror this morning by the news that the brutish Spaniards at Santiago de Cuba have put to death forty-nine more of her crew and passengers. These unhappy souls comprised her captain, thirty-six of the crew, and twelve Cubans. One of these was Franchi Alfaro, who was on his way, according to the Spaniards, to take the Presidency of the Cuban republic. He offered his captors $1,000,000 for his life, but blood is the one thing Spaniards love better than gold, and his price was not accepted. The following dispatches tell the story of the sickening deed:

HAVANA, Nov. 12.—On the 7th inst. the captain and 36 of the crew of the steamer Virginius were executed at Santiago de Cuba, and on the next day, the 8th, 12 more of the Cuban volunteers on the vessel were shot. Franchi Alfaro, who was among the latter number, offered the Spanish authorities $1,000,000 if they would spare his life. The Spanish say that Alfaro came to assume the Presidency of the so-called Cuban republic.

The captain and crew were shot by a squad of marines in the public square. Twelve of the insurgents were shot in front of the slaughter house wall.

THE FEELING AT WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 12.—The news of the execution of some 53 others of the Virginius captives was received here at noon to-day in a Havana press dispatch, and created a thrill of horror, which increased to a spirit of fierce indignation when Consul Gen. Hall subsequently telegraphed Secretary Fish that the Havana morning papers confirmed the story. The Secretary, after conferring with the President, wrote a long dispatch to Minister Sickles, by cable, which protested in earnest terms, in the name of humanity and a common civilization, against the continuation of this policy of bloodshed, and declaring that the United States would demand of Spain the amplest reparation for any damage to the property or to the life of any citizen of the United States.

NAVAL PREPARATIONS.

The Mohapac and Manhattan, ordered put in commission, and to which officers are assigned, will join the North Atlantic squadron. The Government seems to be more earnest than heretofore in protecting the waters between the United States and Cuba from Spanish molestation. The Madrid Government being unable to enforce its authority in Cuba, that of the United States will be impelled to assert its power in all cases where the interests of the citizens of this country and its own honor require decisive action. The President and all members of the Cabinet are in accord on this subject.

THE NEWS IN NEW YORK.

NEW YORK, Nov. 12.—The colored people here are very much excited over the Virginius massacre, and have arranged to call meetings for the purpose of gathering arms after the style of the old John Brown meetings. A telegram has been received from Col. W. Saunders, of Baltimore, offering to raise a colored regiment for the Cuban service.

The Irish have enlisted 400 men to avenge the death of Gen. Ryan. Three hundred Cuban cigar makers waited upon the Junta and offered their services whenever called upon. Dr. Eovine, a prominent Cuban, says that sufficient funds are now in hand to send out a large expedition.

W. A. Saffron, Chairman of the Cuban Anti-Slavery Committee, and the Rev. Henry Highland Garnett, Secretary, will leave this city to-morrow to present to President Grant a petition signed by over 600,000 colored men in every State of the Union, praying for belligerent rights to Cuba.

Orders have been received at the Brooklyn navy yard to get the sloops of war Kearsarge and Juniata ready for sea at once. At noon to-day, under equally pressing orders, the torpedo-boat Admiral Porter was launched, and will be made ready for active operations in a few days. All the officers about the yard are greatly excited over the news.

Origin of Quinine.

A parliamentary paper on the progress of India in 1872, gives some interesting information relative to the cultivation of the quinine plant, which was introduced from South America in 1860 into the hill districts of Hindostan. It appears that there are now 2,630,286 plants in the Government plantations of the Neilgherry hills alone, without counting those of private planters in this and other districts. The largest trees are 30 feet high and more than three feet in girth around the trunk. The area covered by the plantations amounts to 950 acres, and is largely added to every year. The bark under cultivation is more productive in quinine and the other febrifuge alkaloids than the wild bark of South America. During last year 7,295 pounds of excellent bark were sold in the London market, while 65,688 pounds were shipped to the local manufactory. This year 20,000 pounds will be sent home. The alkaloid is manufactured on the spot in an exceedingly crude form for the use of local medical stores, and hundreds of fever patients are thus annually cured.

Visible Supply of Grain.

Growth of the Postoffice.

Rapid as has been our national growth in population during the last ten years, our postal growth has been far more rapid. While the population has grown from thirty-one millions to thirty-eight, or less than twenty-five per cent., our postal expenditures have increased from eleven million dollars to twenty-six, an increase of nearly one hundred and forty per cent.; that is, the growth of the postoffice has been more than five times that of the population. This is mainly due to the change coming over us as a nation. Our Atlantic communities are rapidly exchanging the pursuit of agriculture for that of manufactures. Every year witnesses a growing amount of business in the manufacturing towns and cities, and business carries correspondence with it; while those communities that continue to rely on the produce of their farms are falling off both in business and in population. A gentleman who, during the past year, revisited his boyhood's home in Vermont, found that ten of the neighboring farms had passed, at low prices, into the hands of the close-fisted, hard-working owner of the eleventh. The old houses still stood, windowless and half roofless, only to remind the passer-by of a New England farming generation rapidly passing away. Rhode Island is composed of Providence and its suburbs. Six of the cities of Massachusetts contain one-third of her million and a half of people. The tendency of the age and of the nation is toward centralization in cities. But there are other causes than this for the rapid growth of the postoffice. The past decade has witnessed postal improvements greater than any made since the days of our first Postmaster-General, Benjamin Franklin. Ten years ago the mails stopped at every large office, were there sorted, and dispatched the next day. Now much of the sorting and handling is done in the cars, while flying through the country with a speed of thirty miles an hour. No rest is allowed the mails till they arrive at their destination. Formerly every one had to call for his letters, excepting in the larger cities, where carriers delivered, collecting an extra charge; now Government spends a million and a half on the letter-carrier system. Then all sums of money too small for banking were sent loose in the mails—the dead letters alone then contained eighty thousand dollars a year in small sums, and a million and a half in checks, that never reached their destination; to-day nearly sixty million dollars are annually sent in money orders, and that system has been extended to all parts of the civilized world. Then five million dollars' worth of postal matter passed free through the mails; to-day every letter, every paper, pays its own way. By the abolishment of franking at the commencement of the present fiscal year, the old postal deficiency of some six million dollars a year has fallen off one-half. To say nothing of letters sent by the department and by members of Congress, all of which are now prepaid, the payment of letters addressed to the department and to members, on the private business of the writers, will annually add over half a million dollars to the postal receipts.—Appletons' Journal.

The World Once Ice-Bound.

Geologists are familiar with evidences of glacial action in some of the older rocks; and if there be any truth in the opinions so ably advocated by Mr. Croll, we should expect such evidences to occur. Mr. Cumming, so long ago as 1848, suggested the probable glacial origin of some of the Old Red Sandstone conglomerates. Prof. Ramsay holds the same opinion, and has well proved the existence of glacial action in our latitudes during the Permian period. Doubtful evidence of ice-action during the cretaceous period has long been before us, and there can be but little doubt that glaciers existed over the regions now occupied by the Alps during miocene and earlier times. All these cases, however, are in temperate regions; the peculiarity of the discovery announced by Mr. Blanford is that the glacial action must have taken place over a large area in what is now a tropical country. It is not possible at present to fit this supposed glacial period into our Western geological chronology; the great divisions of the formations into tertiary, secondary and palæozoic periods, which we adopt, and which for us have a definite meaning, are now known to be useless, and, indeed, misleading, when applied to the formations of Asia. As our knowledge increases, and as fresh areas of the earth's surface are thoroughly explored, we must expect that our old lines of division will fade away, or rather, will retain only a local and not a general value. From this point of view the deep-sea explorations, now being carried on, possess an immense value. Already they have shown us that types of life till lately supposed to have been long extinct still survive. Geologists frequently reverse this process, and bring to light, in older rocks, forms hitherto only known in existing seas or in the newer rocks.

Ceremonies After a Pope's Death.

As soon as a Pope dies, the Cardinal Chamberlain calls out to him three times in the presence of several members of the Council, addressing him by his proper name, "Art thou dead?" Then answering for the deceased, he exclaims, "He is dead!" and taking the fisherman's ring, as the seal of the Pope is called, breaks it. The bell of the Capitol is tolling, and the news is dispatched to foreign governments and absent cardinals, which latter are invited to the conclave for a new election. While the vacancy continues, the Chamberlain exercises the supreme authority. The cardinals who have been created by the defunct pontiff put on as mourning serge robes of a violet color, while such as were created by his predecessors wear green, faced with red. The dead body is washed and embalmed, and taken to the Pauline chapel of the Vatican, where it is arrayed in the pontifical habits, after which it is taken to St. Peter's and placed in the Sistine chapel, on a splendid bed of state, surrounded by burning tapers night and day, and by priests who pray for the soul of the departed. The people meanwhile crowd to kiss his feet. On the ninth day after death the body is put into a coffin with coronation medals in gold, silver and brass, to show that death equals all things. After the funeral ceremonies, the coffin is removed to a church which is said to have been founded by Constantine the Great, and there left till it is deposited in the tomb prepared for it. After the nine days of funeral rites, all cardinals who can possibly be present in Rome meet together to go into conclave. Before entering, they visit St. Peter's, where the mass of the Holy Spirit is sung, and an oration delivered on the election of a pontiff. They return to the Vatican, where the hymn, "Veni, Creator," is sung, and certain prayers are rehearsed, and the bill for the election is read.

An Extraordinary Robbery.

Evidently the outlaws are not all on the frontier. The New York papers give an account of an act committed near the village of Catskill, which for boldness compares with the recent robbing of trains in the Far West. A farmer, named Post, with his wife, son, daughter and hired man, was quietly eating supper, when six men entered the room and walked up to the table. Each drew a revolver and held it to the head of a member of the family, at the same time warning them to keep quiet or their brains would be blown out. One man then drew handcuffs from beneath his cloak, and put them on each person at the table, and on a colored girl who came in to serve the table. Not feeling that the victims were entirely secure, the thieves, before ransacking the house, took a bed cord and firmly tied all the members of the family together. While one stood guard over the prisoners, the others appropriated everything of value in the house that could be easily removed, including some $400 in money, a gold watch and chain, considerable jewelry, and bonds and checks amounting to $2,200. They even took rings from the fingers of their bound victims and put them on their own. They then sat down to the table and ate supper. After remaining in the house an hour, they wished the family good night and departed.

The Maine Way.

A singular course of proceeding has been adopted in Maine in relation to the punishment of murder. Under a law of many years standing, the penalty for this crime was death by hanging; but the statute provided that a convicted murderer should not suffer death till the expiration of one year after he had received sentence. During this time he was confined in the State Prison, and at any time thereafter, the Governor could issue his warrant for execution. In no instance, we believe, was a murderer hung under this law. Four years ago the law was modified. Each convicted murderer received the death sentence as before, and a year was allowed to intervene between the receiving and carrying out of the same. He was not allowed, however, to spend years in prison, doubting between hope and fear. Before the expiration of the year of imprisonment the Governor submits to the Executive Council all the papers in the case, including the testimony, and such other facts as throw light on the crime and the parties to it. The members of the Council then vote whether the sentence shall be carried out, or whether it shall be commuted to imprisonment for life. Under this arrangement only one execution has occured in four years.

Bank of England Forgeries.

The punishment of death for forgery was abolished in England in 1837. Many years ago the Bank of England was in constant trouble on account of the numerous forgeries perpetrated upon it. Between 1797 and 1818 there were nearly 1,000 prosecutions of persons for forging Bank of England notes, or knowingly being in possession of such notes, and 313 convictions and executions. After an act was passed in 1798 enabling the Bank of England to issue notes under tho value of five pounds—$25—forgeries increased amazingly, and in the eight years subsequent no less than 146 persons perished on the gallows for the crime of forgery on that bank. The notes were so exactly copied that even bank officers could not always detect the forgeries. This state of things led to special effort to protect the bank by manufacturing the paper by peculiar and expensive processes. This has been done for the last half century with great success. The note-paper is manufactured at Laverstoke, a small village in the county of Hampshire. The notes are never isued a second time, but are always destroyed after their presentation at the bank for payment. No notes for less than one pound—$5—are issued.

Eating Without an Appetite.

It is wrong to eat without an appetite, for it shows there is no gastric juice in the stomach, and that nature does not need food, and not needing it, there being no fluid to receive and act upon it, it remains there only to putrify, the very thought of which should be sufficient to deter any man from eating without an appetite for the remainder of his life. If a tonic is taken to whet the appetite it is a mistaken course, for its only result is to cause one to eat more, when already an amount has been eaten beyond what the gastric juice is able to prepare.

The object to be obtained is a larger supply of gastric juice, not a larger supply of food; and whatever fails to consider this fact fails also to have any efficiency toward the cure of dyspeptic diseases. The formation of gastric juice is directly proportioned to the wear and tear of the system, which it is to be the means of supplying, and this wear and tear can only be the result of exercise. The efficient remedy for dyspepsia is work—out door work—beneficial and successful in direct proportion as it is agreeable, interesting and profitable.—Hall's Journal of Health.

WONDERFUL STRENGTH OF INSECTS.—It has been demonstrated that a beetle is capable of lifting 315 times its own weight. A man of ordinary muscular power is full 100 times feebler, and had an elephant such comparative strength it could run away with a load of 5,000,000 pounds. The flea, too, scarcely three-hundredths of an inch in height, manages to leap without difficulty over a barrier 500 times its own altitude. For a man six feet is an unusually high leap. Imagine him jumping 3,000 feet, or nearly three-fifths of a mile.

ANECDOTES OF GREAT AMERICANS.

With One Little American Thrown In to Fill Chinks.

[From Lippincott's Monthly Gossip.]

GEORGE WASHINGTON.

One day, in a fit of abstraction, the juvenile George cut down Bushrod's favorite cherry tree with a hatchet. His purpose was to cut—and run.

But the old gentleman came sailing round the corner of the barn just as the future father of his country had started on the retreat.

"Look here, sonny," thundered the stern old Virginian, "who cut that tree down?"

George reflected a moment. There wasn't another boy or another hatchet within fifteen miles. Besides, it occurred to him that to be virtuous is to be happy. Just as Washington senior turned to go in and get his horsewhip, our little hero burst into tears, and nestling among his father's coat-tails, exclaimed, "I cannot tell a lie. It must have been a frost."

"My son, my son," stammered the fond parent as he made a pass for his offspring, "when you get to be first in war and first in peace, just cover your back-pay into the treasury, and the newspaper press will respect you!"

ALONZO SAVAGE, THE SABBATH SCHOOL GENIUS.

This time it was the pupil who put the question. The Sabbath school teacher encouraged her children to bring each a Scripture question to be propounded to the class. Alonzo Savage said he would like to be told why St. Stephen was like a thanksgiving raisin? He allowed it was because they stoned him.

The boy has grown up and entered upon a career of usefulness. He gets steady wages as a railroad braksman, and last week he celebrated his golden wedding. All because Alonzo was faithful at Sabbath school.

DANIEL WEBSTER.

The following anecdote of the great Massachusetts statesman has never before appeared in print:

One day, Clay, Webster, and Calhoun met upon the steps of the Capitol. Mr. Clay ventured to remark, in his most affable style, that it looked like rain. Calhoun looked wise, but said nothing. Evidently he took in the whole situation at a glance. It was a crisis for Webster. Carefully laying his thumb behind the third brass button of his blue coat, he gazed from out of these cavernous eyes and grandly uttered these prophetic words: "No, gentlemen, the American people will never forsake the Constitution. We shall have fair weather."

And so it proved.

A POET'S SENSE.

Mr. Emerson, the poet, was in Rome last winter, and visited the studio of Mr. Tilton, the American artist, whose smallest bits of canvas bring an almost incredible price. Mr. Tilton, wishing art to pay a tribute to poetry, took from its hanging a picture handsomely framed and presented it to his guest. The next day Mr. Emerson, overtaken by a stinging of conscience, came again, and in his hand was the empty frame, which he handed to Mr. Tilton with this remark: "Mr. Tilton, I accept gladly your painting, but I must return the frame, for I cannot keep anything of so great pecuniary value."

The Great St. Louis Bridge.

[St. Louis Letter to Chicago Tribune.]

This bridge is a marvel of engineering and mechanical folly and profligacy. It has cost millions of dollars more than it need, and has been three times as long in building as it ought or need to have been. It is built of huge steel tubes, each of which is about fifteen feet long and sixteen inches in diameter. These tubes are made of steel staves, somewhat like a barrel, six of which form the tube, being bound together with a steel hoop, solid the full length. Each tube weighs about two tons. The bridge consists of three double-track spans across the river, which are supported by two piers in the center of the stream. The foot of the arch springs only thirty-five feet from the center of the river at low water, and the crown is only seventy feet above low water. As the variations of the stream are upward of forty feet, it is certain that very few boats will ever pass under it at any stage of water.

But a portion of one of the spans is completed, and it hangs low-browed and sullen, a vast mass of metal, apparently getting ready to drop to the bottom of the river. The weight in this span is truly enormous, and the conundrum with engineers is whether the piers can support the thrust of all this mountain of steel as it expands and contracts with the variations of temperature. The engineers on the work pretend to be very positive that the crown of the arch will rise or fall as it gets hot or cold; but others are equally positive that the mass of metal is entirely too great for this to be done, and that the force of the thrust must come against the piers, which sooner or later will give way under such an enormous flank or lateral pressure. The extreme difference of length of each of these spans, from the frosts of winter to summer heats, is estimated to be about eight minutes.

When the first span was ready to be completed, the length of the tubes had been computed at a temperature of 50 degrees, and one morning last month (September), the weather was just right to insert the last length. Before the workmen gathered it had got too warm, so the tube was too long, and could not be pounded or forced in at all. A few days after, forty-five tons of ice was tied on the arch, in gunny-sacks, and the span was at last contracted two inches and a quarter, enough to admit the last length.

The work is now progressing on all the spans, and their completion is named as occurring in January.

Cut This Out.

If a person swallows any poison whatever, or falls into convulsions from having overloaded the stomach, an instantaneous remedy more efficient and applicable in a large number of cases than half a dozen medicines we now think of, is a heaping teaspoon of common salt, and as much good mustard, stirred rapidly in a teacup of water, warm or cold, and swallowed instantly. It is scarcely down before it begins to come up, bringing with it the remaining contents of the stomach; and lest there be any remnant of a poison, however small, let the white of an egg, or a teacup of strong coffee, be swallowed as soon as the stomach is quiet, because these very common articles nullify a larger number of virulent poisons than any medicine in the shops.—Exchange.

Lead Pencils.

The first, and still the most widely extended use of plumbago, was for making crayons or pencils. The original method of manufacture was very simple. The lumps of mineral were cut into the required shape and used in the natural state. At a later date it was sawed into the shape now used, and covered with wood, making the well-known lead pencil; but the Berrowdale mine, in England, the best known, finally ceased to produce the mineral pure enough for the purpose, and that method was reluctantly abandoned. The refuse about the mine was then utilized by purifying and pressing into blocks, and these in turn were sawed into "pencil leads." But the leads made in this way were weak and unreliable, and even had they been useful the march of civilization required pencils of different grades, some soft and others harder, while the sawed leads were all alike. The present method consists in selecting the best granulated plumbago (found till recently only in Germany), pulverizing it finely, and floating it in water through a series of vats, the coarser particles settling to the bottom of the first vat, the finer to the next, and so on till, after passing through several, that which settles in the last is considered fine enough for the purpose, A suitable clay is found, as yet only in Germany, and this is treated to the floating process, the finest only being fit for use, The plumbago and clay are then mixed together with water to the consistency oi cream, and ground together like grinding paint. When this operation is completed, the mass is plastic, water enough having evaporated to leave it in that state. It is then put in a press and forced through an opening of the size desired for the pencil leads, and the leads are cut to a suitable length, and straighened and dried. When they are dry enough to handle they are placed in a crucible, the air is excluded, and they are subjected to a high heat, which bakes them, and brings them out ready to be placed in the cedar for pencils. The different grades are produced by the different mixtures of clay and plumbago; the more clay, the harder the grade produced.

A Big Blow.

Last evening, while the chief engineer of a lung-tester was expiating upon the benefits to be derived from the free use of his instrument, a cadaverous looking individual stepped out of the crowd and remarked to him:

"Mister, do you think it would help me any to blow into that can?"

"Yes, sir; certainly; it would expand your chest, give elasticity to your lungs, and lengthen your life. Why, you'd soon be able to blow 500 pounds and win the $5 prize."

"Why, does a fellow get $5 when he blows that many pounds?"

"Yes, sir; wouldn't you like to make a trial?" with a knowing wink to the crowd.

"I don't care if I do," said Greens, walking around and planking down a dime of the greasy shinplaster sort.

Then taking the mouth-piece in his hand, he made ready. He opened his mouth until the hole in his face looked like a dry-dock for ocean steamers, and began to take in wind. The inflation was like that of the Graphic balloon, but not so disastrous. That fellow's chest began to grow and distend until he resembled a pouter pigeon more than a man, at which point he put the mouth-piece to his lips and blew with such force that his eyes came out and stood around on his cheek-bones to see what was the matter—but that can-top went up like a flash, and the needle of the indicator spun around like the button on a country school-house door, until it stood still at 500 pounds! The crowd cheered, and the keeper of the can paid over the $5 in stamps, with a mutter of astonishment. But Greens pocketed them coolly, and turning to the spectators, said:

"Look here, gents, that ain't nothing to do at all for a man who has been a bugler in a deaf and dumb asylum for seven years, like me!"—New Orleans Herald.

The Gentle Mongol and the Gentler Mule.

The author of "Travels on Horseback" describes a pleasing trait of Chinese character as follows:

"The Chinese are always kind to animals and never punish; hence a mule that in the hands of a foreigner would be not only useless but dangerous to every one about it, becomes in the possession of a Chinaman as quiet as a lamb and as tractable as a dog. We never beheld a runaway, a jibbing or a vicious mule or pony in a Chinaman's employment, but found the same rattling, cheerful pace maintained over heavy or light roads by means of a tur-r or cluk-k, the beast turning to the right or left and stopping with but a hint from the reins. This treatment is extended to all animals they press into their service. Often have I admired the tact exhibited in getting a large drove of sheep through narrow, crowded streets and alleys by merely having a little boy to lead one of the quietest of the flock in front; the others steadily followed without aid either from a yelping cur or cruel goad. Cattle, pigs and birds are equally cared for."

The Latest Fish Story.

On Sunday last there appeared suddenly on the surface of the Columbia river, in front of this port, countless millions of a species of the Mediterranean herring family, about the size of sardines, but the picture and size of the anchovy. None were seen alive, but dead, and floating upon the water. The school spread across the bay from our docks to Cementville, a distance of 7 miles, and Capt. Pool, of the ship Mary H., informs us that he struck the floating field about 4 miles below here sailing through the mass for a distance of 3 miles, on his route from Skipanon. They seemed each to have a rupture just below the gills, which produced death, and if not killed by some eruption in nature akin to an earthquake, must have come in from the sea and over-exerted themselves swimming against the fresh current of the Columbia, which is not their native element. This same species of fish are found in abundance about the bays and coasts of British Columbia, where the natives and others procure and use them as a substitute for candles. The mass about here on Tuesday would have been sufficient to supply torches for a procession reaching from here to New York.—Oregon Astorian.

Operations of the Mint.

The annual report of the Director of the United States Mint for the fiscal year ending June 30, says the amount of gold and silver deposits and purchases and coins struck, stamped, and manufactured during the year was as follows:

Deposits, gold	$59,937,429.45
Silver	12,307,389.43
Total amount received and acted upon	$72,244,818.88

Deducting re-deposits made and issued by one institution and deposited with another, the diposits were:

Gold	$57,573,355.88
Silver	9,145,328.43
Total	$66,849,714.31
Gold pieces coined	1,824,420
Value	$35,249,337.50
Silver pieces coined	11,774,250
Value	$2,945,795.50
Minor coinage, pieces	18,925,000
Value	$494,050.00
Total number of pieces	32,523,670
Total value	$38,689,183.00
Bars of fine gold	$ 7,054,956.86
Imported gold	12,940,659.25
Total	$29,495,616.11
Fine silver	3,034,259.56
Imported silver	3,981,654.94
Total	$27,517,530.61

The report is very voluminous, is full of interesting statistical and general information, and concludes as follows: "Some idea of the increase of operations may be formed when it is stated that the coinage of gold during the month of October approximated in value $14,000,000. The coin, except as to the Pacific Coast States and Territories, being as a general thing in the Treasury and banks, the present time is a favorable one for estimating the amount of gold and silver coin in the country. From the most reliable data obtainable the gold coin is estimated at $135,000,000, and of silver $5,000,000; total, $140,000,000. The silver coin is principally in circulation in California, Idaho, Arizona, and Texas. The increase in coin in this country has been at a very fair rate since the 1st of April last, and the indications are that, although there may be occasional exportations, it will gradually go on till an amount sufficient to enable the country to resume specie payments will be secured. This much desired result, however, will depend upon conditions which cannot be discussed."

The Weather.

[From the Danbury News Man's Almanac for 1874.]

I shall not say anything here about the importance of this subject.

We all know how unbearable society would be without it; how tame and commonplace would become heaven and earth in its absence.

I merely wish to call the attention of the reader to the care that has been taken in selecting the weather for this book.

Being warned by the last season, I have put in plenty of rain, which will be found to arrive just in the nick of time.

I have dealt lightly in thunderstorms; I find they are not popular; and I have such an antipathy to lightning-rod men that I lose no opportunity to injure them.

I have been rather liberal with snow, for the sake of the young and livery stables, and have put in some extraordinary hail, for the encouragement of the inhabitant, and a little frost, to stir up the amateur in tobacco and other variety of cabbage.

But accuracy is the strong point of the volume. When it says, ', Look out for rain," then is the time for you to "hump yourself" for the house. And when it says "Frost," any delay in getting your wife's father's coat over the tomatoes and dahlias will prove eminently disastrous to those articles. Yes, I have aimed to be accurate, looking more to the personal comfort and general information of my patrons than to the plaudits of a wicked world, and gold, which perish in a day, I am told.

I have not lost sight of the fact that I have a formidable and unscrupulous opposition at Washington. But trusting to an honest purpose, a discriminating public, and eight years of promiscuous trusting as the editor of a country newspaper, I shall press steadily on, and hurt that Washington chap.

THE YELLOW FEVER SCOURGE AT MEMPHIS.—The Collector of Memphis, in a letter to the Revenue Bureau, at Washington, says: "The yellow fever has been a terrible scourge, and no person can describe the suffering and destitution there. Many families of four, six, and eight members have been swept away, and there are now at least two thousand widows and orphans entirely destitute to be provided for, besides a thousand who are unable to work, or, if able and willing to do so, can find no work, and are dependent on the charity of others. Had it not been for the noble generosity of the Northern cities in coming to our relief with money and supplies, the suffering would have been been ten-fold greater."

The Curse of Monopolies.

(From the Industrial Age.)

The Hon. F. W. Horn lately delivered the annual address before the Ozaukee (Wis.) County Agricultural Society, at Cedarburg. Mr. Horn is a German lawyer, who has filled a large space in the public affairs of Wisconsin for the past 30 years. He is an independent and strong thinker, and seldom moves that he does not make himself felt. In this address, Mr. Horn has some salient points and fair hits. We think we recognize in one of his pen-paintings the features of some men who have inflicted great and permanent injury upon the people of Wisconsin, by robbing them, according to law, of a large share of the earnings of their lives, and who arrogate to themselves an importance due to nobleness and patriotism, whereas their true position should be that of heartless sharpers. The people Ozaukee county have paid those parties over a quarter of a million of dollars to get up mortgages, held principally by Wall street sharks, on their farms, and given for worthless railroad stock. We have only room for the following extract from Mr. Horn's address:

"Although these corporations will not kill the goose that lays the golden eggs, yet past experience shows that they will try to divide profits with you in such a manner that it remains questionable, in some localities at least, who owns the farm, the wood, timber or stone-quarry, the railroad company or the owner in fee on the land; for whenever a company makes more profit in carrying the produce, wood, timber or stone to market than the owner of the land in raising or working it, then the company is the principal owner of the land, and all it contains, to all intents and purposes.

"It has been said with much truth that 'corporations have no souls to save,' that they are 'bodies without souls.' If you have not experienced the truth of that saying, others that I might name have done so to their sorrow; the railroad farm mortgages cost the people of this county alone over a quarter of a million of dollars lately. And here we find this peculiarity in the composition of corporations, that men who stand highest in the esteem of their fellow-citizens will, when united in business as a corporation, lose, so to say, their identity; the honest and fair-dealing private citizens, Smith, Jones and Miller, become unscrupulous, grasping, avaricious and unfair Smith, Jones and Miller, when united in a corporation. It is, therefore, never safe to recommend a corporation as trustworthy because it is composed of 'some of the best men' of the city or State; each seems to hide behind the other when concerned to do a fair thing; each speaks very friendly to you, but it is altogether different when united action is required to do what is fair and honest.

"I am not painting in colors of too dark a hue, when I say that the republic is in danger from these monster monopolies that are embracing these United States like a boa-constrictor with their iron rings.

"History tells us that Rome, after filling the world with her fame, declined; the cause was that laws were enacted affecting real estate, and the condition, skill and products of labor; the lands were held by a few persons; land monopoly destroyed Rome.

"Hear what Ammianus, the Roman, tells us of the effects of that kind of monopoly upon the citizens, and then ask yourself whether our various monopolies must not produce the same result in this country, nay, whether their evil effects are not already too apparent. Rome's ruin should be a warning to America. Ammianus says: 'A profound and secure peace succeeded the tumults of the republic. Distant nations revered the name of the people and the majesty of the Roman Senate. But this native splendor was degraded and sullied by the conduct of those who displayed the rent rolls of their estates (here, the stocks, bonds and mortgages of the corporations), and provoked the just resentment of every man who recollected that their poor and invincible ancestors were not distinguished one above another. Whenever these rich land-owners (here, monopolists and shoddy aristocrats) visited public places, they assumed a tone of loud and insolent command towards their equals, and appropriated to their own use the conveniences designed for the Roman people.'"

Systematic Purchasing System.

No subject of an economic nature has given our Grangers so much trouble as the question of where, how and of whom shall we buy our supply? Individual granges have attempted it, and generally with some degree of success, especially in the matter of purchasing groceries. County granges have also made large purchases from first hands, at satisfactory prices. But there has been a feeling that there was lack of system, which should have a head center, and do away in a measure with much of the inconvenience and trouble which now arise. No plan has come under our observation that presents so many good points, and so little to disapprove of, as the plan proposed by Jos. H. Osborn, Esq., of Oshkosh, Wis., the Purchasing Agent of the State Grange. He will soon issue a circular on the Systematic Purchasing System which will be organized among the granges of that State. We hope this most important subject will be thoroughly discussed at the coming meeting at Bloomington of our own State Grange:

"The system will be perfect in itself, and will no doubt prove a solution to many problems which have arisen during the past year in the purchasing experience of the order in this section. Councils similar in plan to those now in Winnebago, Dodge, Rock and Fond du Lac counties, are to be organized in each county. The Grange, upon joining a County Council, is to pay a fee of $10, and is entitled to three delegates. Each County Council is to send a delegate to a State Purchasing Council, and pay similar fees to aid in forming a purchasing fund. The County Council is to appoint an agent, whose office will be situated in the the county seat. He will have control of a warehouse, where samples of all classes of agricultural implements on which reductions are made to the order can be found on exhibition. Orders will be taken by him direct from the Granges, and not from individual members, and all orders then pass to the State Purchasing Agent, who goes into the field with these thousands of orders and secures special wholesale reductions by thus buying in the mass. The irregularity of single orders is thus avoided, and the great benefit of concentration secured.

"In addition to the implement branch of the business, the County Agent will have, in connection with his warehouse, a hay press, and in time to come a wheat elevator. Thus, when Patrons come into market with hay and grain, and fail to secure the price deemed by them adequate, the Grange Agent takes the produce, forwards a sum of money upon the same enough to enable the Patron to swim along, and presses the hay or stores the wheat to await the action of the market. In this immediate section of the State the hay will probably be shipped to the Lake Superior region in a pressed condition, where it always commands good figures. In this way the Grange Agents, by combination throughout the West, can control the market in a systematic manner. Besides this, the agent, who, of course, will be a member of the order, will be general business man of the granges in his jurisdiction, and perform those thousand and one duties that of course will be required of such persons. The greatest care, of course, is to be exercised by by County Councils in the selection of their representatives, and, as large sums of money will constantly be circulating through the hands of the latter, abundant sureties will be demanded. This system, which will soon be inaugurated in this State by the Purchasing Agent, will be presented for the consideration of other Western State Granges, and it is believed that at the meeting of the National Grange, at St. Louis, next January, a national plan, under the same system of organization, will be duly carried out before seed time next year."

The Monopoly of the Lakes.

While a combination of railroads keep up the price of carrying Western produce to the sea-board, Congress keeps in force a law which prohibits foreign owned vessels from taking our crops to Buffalo, Oswego or Ogdensburgh. After every harvest Canadian vessels leave this port in ballast, when every warehouse is filled with grain which has accumulated in quantities to tax the carrying facilities of every railroad leading to the East till spring. This is one of the ways the Government of Washington adopts to compel farmers to send their crops to market by rail. No water is free until you get to tide water. The vessels on our lakes are largely owned in Canada, and if they were permitted to take cargoes indiscriminately to English or American ports, the price of carrying produce would be greatly reduced. Quite recently the owners of Canadian vessels sailing from this port have come to the conclusion that, under an article in the late treaty with Great Britain, which went into effect last July, they have the right to carry cargoes consigned to places in the United States, providing they are to pass through a part of the Dominion. Considerable grain and other produce have been shipped from here to Collingwood, Sarnia and Port Colburn, thence by rail to other places where it is re-shipped. This business has heretofore been monopolized by vessels owned in the United States, but now some eighty Canadian vessels have entered into competition with them, and the effect is at once to reduce freights. If their right to continue in the trade be acknowledged, the farmers have gained one step in the matter of cheap transportation. Now let Congress make the carrying trade on the lakes absolutely free to vessels carrring any flag, and another long step will be taken in the same direction, By what possible right do a few American vessel owners claim to monopolize the waters of the Great Lakes? It is a monopoly worse than railroad monopoly. In our opinion Government should encourage foreign capitalists to build ships to engage in the carrying on the lakes, instead of putting obstacles in the way. Western farmers care very little who own ships or railroads, providing they will carry their products to market cheaply.—Prairie Farmer.

The First Grange Governor.

Hon. William R. Taylor, the Governor elect of Wisconsin, is a man about 55 years of age. He is a native of New England, but has resided for over 25 years in Dane county, Wis. During all that time he has cultivated a large farm in the town of Cottage Grove, about six miles from Madison. Pursuing this occupation with unremitting industry, and with the thrifty habits that vindicate his nativity, he has prospered in a high degree, and is the possessor of an independent fortune. He has served in both branches of the Legislature, is one of the active trustees of the Insane Hospital, and is President of the State Agricultural Society. In all of these positions he has shown great capacity for public affairs, and has afforded abundant assurance that his administration will be characterized by rigid economy and absolute integrity. Mr. Taylor was a Democrat of the old school, and during the war did not escape the appellation of "Copperhead." But he became a Granger very soon after the inception of that movement, is master of a local grange, and was one of the first to advise the abandonment of the Democratic cadaver, and the organization of a party on a new and reformed basis. In person, he is a man of large and rather unwieldy frame, with a complexion bronzed by a long series of harvest suns, and with hands that earned their callous long before the farmers' movement made plow-handles fashionable. Doubtless he will be something less than a handsome figure-head for the Badger State, but he is quite certain to be very much more than a figure-head. —Chicago Times.

To Whom It May Concern.

The industrial and productive interests of the country are those interests which develop and enrich a country, and, like the substantial food we eat, they strengthen the whole body.

When the capital of the country is taken from the agricultural and productive interests and the legitimate channels of trade and commerce, and is invested in the interests of large corporations originated for the purpose of enriching a few individuals, or is invested in visionary railroad enterprises and bank monopolies, like indulging in poisonous liquors, it destroys the whole system. Hence financial panics and bank suspensions.

We throw out these hints to whom it may concern.—Phila. Anti-Monopolist.

THE Chicago Times is moved to insert the following advertisement without the usual charge:

FOR SALE—An elegant residence property in the town of Madison, Wis., and and only two miles from the State Capitol. It was recently purchased by its present owner, but being about to retire from business, he will have no occasion to occupy it. His successor has no use for it, being already the possessor of a fine farm in the vicinity. Intending purchasers may address, in mourning envelopes, Cad., Executive Chamber, Madison, Wis.

How to Roast a Turkey.

As Thanksgiving is near at hand, we print for the benefit of our good housewives the following excellent recipe for roasting a turkey. It is from "Common Sense in the Household," a high authority in matters culinary:

After drawing the turkey, rinse out with several waters, and in the next to the last mix a teaspoonful of soda. The inside of a fowl, especially if purchased in the market, is sometimes very sour, and imparts an unpleasant taste to the stuffing, if not to the inner part of the legs and side-bones. The soda will act as a corrective, and is moreover very cleansing. Fill the body with this water, shake well, empty it out, and rinse with fair water. Then prepare a dressing of bread-crumbs, mixed with butter, pepper, salt, thyme or sweet majoram, and wet with hot water or milk. You may, if you like, add the beaten yolks of two eggs. A little chopped sausage is esteemed an improvement when well incorporated with the other ingredients. Or, mince a dozen oysters and stir into the dressing; and, if you are partial to the taste, wet the bread-crumbs with oyster liquor. The effect upon the turkey-meat, particularly that of the breast, is very pleasant.

Stuff the craw with this, and tie a string tightly about the neck, to prevent the escape of the stuffing. Then fill the body of the turkey, and sew it up with a strong thread. This and the neck string is to be removed when the fowl is dished. In roasting, if your fire is brisk, allow about ten minutes to a pound; but it will depend very much upon the turkey's age whether this rule holds goods. Dredge it with flour before roasting, and baste often; at first with butter and water, afterward with the gravy in the dripping-pan. If you roast in an oven and lay the turkey in the pan, put in with it a teacup of hot water. Many roast always upon a grating placed on the top of the pan. In that case the boiling water steams the under part of the fowl, and prevents the skin from drying too fast, or cracking. Roast to a fine brown, and if it threatens to darken too rapidly, lay a sheet of white paper over it until the lower part is also done.

Stew the chopped giblets in just enough water to cover them, and when the turkey is lifted from the pan, add these, with the water in which they were boiled, to the drippings; thicken with a spoonful of browned flour, wet with cold water to prevent lumping, boil at once and pour into the gravy-boat. If the turkey is very fat, skim the drippings well before putting in the giblets.

Serve with strawberry sauce. Some lay fried oysters in the dish around the turkey.

An Iowan's Invention.

Capt. Scribe Harris, of Dubuque, Iowa, has recently perfected an invention which may prove of inestimable value to the shippers generally, The plan provides for the construction of air-tight iron monitors, to be built with a breadth of beam to equal fifty feet. They are to be pear-shaped, the form of the vessel to be divided into a hold for the storage of coal and fuel, a lower deck-room for stores, a second deck for living-rooms, and a turret above for an operating-room. The monitor stations shall be securely anchored in the ocean at fifty-mile intervals, between the United States and the English coasts, and connected by ocean cables. The advantages to be derived are briefly: 1. The assurance to vessels of a safe anchoring. 2. The ability to send messages at sea. 3. The advantage to the signal corps. 4. Places of refuge in cases of wreck and burning. 5. The advantage to ocean telegraphy. The stations to be in charge of naval officers, to be relieved from time to time. One or two difficulties suggest themselves in connection with this bold project. First, that of anchorage; second, the difficulty of holding the same; and third, the almost impossibility of finding men who would consent to stand in the middle of the ocean as a target for the waves. Could these difficulties be got over there is little doubt that Capt. Harris' plan would prove a most excellent assistant to the safety of ocean navigation, and a great advantage both to the signal service and the international telegraph.

A Rich Convict.

Richard Mackay, who has just been sent to the Penitentiary for a term of eighteen months for manslaughter, owns some of the best mining claims about Nevada, in Gilpin county, and is reported to be worth from $75,000 to $100,000. His case was carried through all the courts, lasting nearly three years, and conducted by the best counsel in the Territory. He has spent $30,000 in the effort to get clear. Mackay gained the high opinion of officers and all with whom he had to do, and during his confinement in jail here was allowed regularly to go alone to his meals at Charpiot's and elsewhere, and the night before he was taken to Canon City, unaccompanied, went over and had an hour's chat with Judge Bromwell. He was always prompt to his word, and it is believed by officers here that he could have been trusted to go alone to the Penitentiary and deliver himself up.

JONES says he would not live all ways, as some folks wish to do. He prefers a nice, quiet boarding-house where he knows just what he has got to depend on.

Something Like an Apology.

The editor of a western paper once gave a notice of a ball, and happened incidentally to mention that the dancing of Major Heeler's bettor half was like "the cavorting of a fly bitten cow in a field of cucumbers." The fact that the editor had not been invited to the ball may somewhat detract from the value of the simile, while at the same time it accounts for his establishing the figure. The major, accompanied by his better half and a six shooter, called on the edtor to complain of the poetical nature of the image. On learning that the lady was the one he had described, the editor besought her to raise her veil. She did so saying,

"Now, sir, I expect you to apolgise."

"Apologize! I should rathur think I would," was the answer, as he seized his hat and rapidly left the room. The astonished major rushed to the window, "Stop, you sir! you have not apologized!"

"All right; I'm going to do it in a minute!,'

"What do you mean?" shouted the major, accentuating the note of interogation with a pistol bullet.

"Can't you see I'm looking for that cow?"

Then taking the mouth-piece in his hand he made ready. He opened his mouth until the hole in his face looked like a dry-dock and began to take in wind. The inflation was like that of the Graphic balloon, but not so disastrous. That fellow's chest began to grow and distend until he resembled a pouter pigeon more than a man, at which point he put the mouth-piece to his lips and blew with such force that his eyes came out and stood around on his cheek-bones to see what was the matter—but that can-top went up like a flash, and the needle of the indicator spun around like the button on a country school house door, until it stood still at 500 pounds!—The crowd cheered, and the keeper of the can paid over the five dollars in stamps, with a mutter of astonishment. Greens pocketed them coolly, and turning to the spectators, said,

"Look here, gents, that ain't nothing to do at all for a man who has been a bugler in a deaf and dumb asylum for seven years, like me!—New Orleans Herald.

An Indiana Mystery.

A party of laborers while at work making some excavations for a switch at the Wildcat stock yards in Lafayette, the other day, came across a singularity at the depth of twenty-five feet below the surface of the earth. It seemed to be a circular structure very much in the shape of a cistern. The walls were very thick, so that the laborers took out the bricks to the depth of eighteen inches without coming to the interior, but in working upon it every stroke of the pick gave back a reverberation like that produced by striking upon the head of an empty barrel.

The laborers give as an excuse for not going in an seeing what the structure really was and what it contained that they were paid for doing so much digging and didn't care to do any more, besides they were not very curious about under ground matters. The bricks were blood red through and through, much more so than the press Philadelphia brick. No such bricks were made in that section of the country within the memory of the oldest inhabitant. The structure was covered on the outside by a coating of cement almost as hard as stone itself. As far as the men went there was no visible opening anywhere.

How the structure came there, or why it was built so far from the surface of the earth, no one can even conjecture. A great many speculations have been made about it, some of which are crude and improbable, while others have some show of sense. At one time in the history of that part of the country, this particular locality was the rendezvous of a gang of horse thieves and counterfeiters, who resided in the neighborhood. It is therefore not improbable that this vault, cistern or what you may choose to call it, was constructed as a hiding place for treasure, with an opening leading to it, which has not yet been discovered.

In some parts of the country a kind of potters' clay is found in smal quantities which, if made into brick could burn as red as those described. To say the least of it, the discovery is one that the necessity of the work upon which the laborers were engaged compelled the partial filling up of the spot and the construction upon it of a railroad track before any one had time for an investigation.

WISHART
PINE TREE!
Tar Cordial,
NATURE'S GREAT REMEDY
FOR
Throat and Lungs.
It is gratifying to us to inform the public that Dr. L. Q. C. Wishart's Pine Tree Tar Cordial, for Throat and Lungs diseases, has gained an enviable reputation from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, and from thence to some of the first families of Europe, not through the press alone, but by persons throughout the States actually benefited and cured at his office. While he publishes less, so say our reporters, he is unable to supply the demand. It gains and holds its reputation—
First. Not by stopping cough, but by loosening and assisting nature to throw off the unhealthy matter collected about the throat and bronchial tubes, which causes irritation.
Second. It removes the cause of irritation of the mucous membrane and bronchial tubes, assists the lungs to act and throw off the unhealthy secretions, and purifies the blood.
Third. It is free from squills, lobelia, ipecac and opium, of which most throat and lung remedies are composed, which allay cough only, and disorganize the stomach. It has a soothing effect on the stomach, acts on the liver and kidneys, and lymphatic and nervous regions, thus reaching to every part of the system, and in its invigorating and purifying effects it has gained a reputation which it must hold above all others in the market.

Our Southwestern Connections—The Detroit and Hillsdale and Eel River Roads—Probabilities.

We take the following from the Detroit Post: Rumors have been afloat for some time past that the Detroit and Hillsdale Road was on the verge of bankruptcy. These rumors prove to be too well founded. The interest due on the bonds last July has not been paid, and will not be paid, and the probalilities are that the road will soon pass into the hands of the bondholders. Many of our readers will recall the fact that this road was one of the projects brought prominently into notice at the time when the railroad mania seized upon Detroit in 1868-9. Public meetings were held, and finally a vote was had upon the question of issuing the bonds of the city to aid in the construction of four roads. The vote failed to carry for all these projects, although on a subseqent occasion Detroit did vote to aid one of them to the extent of $300,000. This action, it will be remembered, was subsequently nullified by the decision of the Supreme Court.

The Hillsdale project was strongly favored by many merchants and business men of the city, who saw in it a favorable connection with the south west and the great railroad system of Indiana and Illinois. The route contemplated was from Ypsilanti through Hillsdale and into Northern Indiana where arrangements would be made for a southwestern connection. The project was taken hold of and promptly pushed through, mainly by the money and energy of Detroit capitalists. The road was finished from Ypsilanti to Hillsdale, and it was then found that the fleid in Northern Indiana had been in the meantime so completely occupied by rival interests that the contemplated route in that direction must necessarily be abandoned. The short road from Ypsilanti to Hillsdale, though passing through an excellent country, could never be made to pay the interest on its cost, as a local road. It could move all the crops raised in the region of country tributary to it in a month, and the balance of the year it must lie still or run at a loss. A connection fo through business of some kind became an absolute necessity.

As long ago as 1855 a road had been projected from Logansport to Detroit, called the Detroit and Eel River Railroad. Considerable work had been done on it, but the finnancial troubles which followed soon after caused a suspension of operations, and the war coming on prevented any revival Gentlemen living along the line of the proposed road and interested in its completion, brought its merits to the attention of our citizens, and several of the Detroit capitalists interested in the Detroit and Hillsdale Road saw in this project the connection they desired. The road from Fort Wayne to Jackson passes within a few miles of Hillsdale, and also crosses the Detroit and Eel River line. With the building of the latter and a running arrangement over the former, Logansport would be reached and the desired connection made. Accordingly Detroit capitalists undertook the building of the Eel River Road. Its history and progress are familiar to our readers, and need not be repeated The Hillsdale Road was extended to a connection with the Fort Wayne and Jackson Road, but the running arrangements with the latter road were never very satisfactory to the former.

Finally a scheme was set on foot to consolidate all the interests, and the directors of the three roads agreed to the terms of consolidation, subject to ratification by the stockholders. A vote of the stockholders was accordingly had. That of the Detroit and Hillsdale and Fort Wayne and Jackson companies was favorable, but the Eel River gentlemen defeated it, considering the terms altogether too much in ftvor of the Jackson and Fort Wayne Company, who had, from the outset, never exhibited any symptoms of cordiality toward the other two companies, and seemed disposed to have the lion's share under any arrangement. The defeat of the consolidation scheme left the Hillsdale Road without any possible connection. The road never paid much over its running expenses, and as a mere local road its prospects were far from flattering. In the hope that something might turn up the holders of the second mortgage bonds for a time met the interest on the first mortgage bonds and kept the road running. But they soon saw that, instead of a prospect of getting any thing out of the road, they were constantly sinking more in it, and they quit paying the interest. As before stated, the July interest is unpaid There are some floating debts which creditors are ready to compromise at 50 cents on the dollar. The representatives of the first mortgage bond holders, who are Eastern men, have recently been here and made arrangements for the running of the road for the present with a view to paying off the floating debt. Accordingly it is still running and earning a little some thing over expenses. The second mortgage bondholders, it is understood abandon the road entirely, pocketing their loss with as good grace as possible. Detroiters lose about $200,000.

The first mortgage bond holders will probably soon take quiet possession of the road. In what way they will make it available does not yet appear. They will probably sell it out to the best advantage possible, though in the present condition of the railroad market, it would be almost impossible to give it away. The Michigan Central might use it in lieu of a double track, building from Brooklyn to Homer on the Air Line, and thus shortening the distance to Chicago some eight or ten miles, or perhaps more. This, however, is a problem of the future.

The Eel River Road has proven a good investment. It passes through a rich region of country, and has several good western and southern connections at Logansport. The scheme of consolidation having fallen through, by reason of its unsatisfactory terms, the road was left without such an eastern outlet as it desired. This has been supplied by the building of 12 miles of road to Butler, where connection was made with the Michigan Southern. This link has just been finished, and was opened for business but a few days ago. It gives the road two outlets, the old one by the Fort Wayne and Jackson road to this city, and the new one by the Michigan Southern to Toledo. It is gratifying to know that during the present autumn two-thirds of the grain business of the road has come this way. The distance to the seabord and all points in New England is shorter by way of Detroit than by Toledo, and the distance to Detroit by way of the Michigan Southern is no farther than by the old route through Hillsdale. Having the competition of the Canada Southern, it is altogether prabable that the Michigan Southern will now pay more attention to Detroit shippers than it has hitherto.

Such is the present status of the Eel River Road. But when the present financial troubles are over it is not unlikely that a scheme now talked of will be consumated. It is well known that before the panic the Canada Southern had abandoned the idea of building to Chicago. It would probably have extended its road, which is already finished to Fayette, Ohio, to some point on the line of the Pittsburg and Fort Wayne Road, with which it would have made running arrangements to Chicago. But this would have required the building of many more miles of road than the Canada Southern is likely to undertake for years to come. Fayette, the present western terminus of the Canada Southern, is but 12 miles from Butler, the present eastern terminus of the Eel River Road. It is now thought likely that that link will be built at no distant day, giving the former road what it most desires, a western connection and a short route to Chicago by the Eel River and Pittsburg and Fort Wayne Roads, and giving the latter what it most desires, a direct eastern connection. This arrangement, if consumated, would be very satisfactory to Detroit interests. It would make the Eel River Road and its business much more available to us than it is now, the lines from Butler to Detroit by the Canada Southern being about as direct as it would be possible to build. Of course nothing is likely to be done for the present, but should monetary affairs brighten by spring, it is not improbable that a year hence will see the plan carried into effect.

The Cabinet Repudiated ay the People.

The Prasident and his Administration have not only been condemned in the aggregate at all the elections this fall, but every membes of the Cabinet has been rebuked and discarded in detail in the States which they claim to represent. They are all left stranded high and dry, without constituencies, support or recognition, except as mere officeholders under a President who, like themselves, has lost the confidence and good opinion of the country.

Oregon led off in this work of political repudiation by a revolution which stigmatized the disgraceful bargain that sent Hipple Mitchell to the Senate with deserved odium, and consigned Mr. Attorney General Williams to the enjoyment of his suddenly acquired fortune away from that State.

Ohio followed with a verdict against Mr. Delano, Secretary of the Interior, which was made more emphatic because he personally directed the canvass on the spot, as an intriguing aspirant for Mr. Thurman's seat in the Senate. His Indian Ring and other notorious jobbery contributed largely to this result.

Iowa plainly told Mr. Belknap that his personal connection with the corrupt sale of arms to France was not only a flagrant violation of neutral duty, but a scandalous taint upon the honor of the department, almost as dark as that which John B. Floyd left to discredit its record.

New York has scornfully turned her back upon Mr. Fish and his son in law, the paid Spanish agent.

Maryland has indignantly resented the pretensions of Mr. Creswell to become her Senator, punished the intrusion of his mercenaries, and, by an overwhelming majority, reaffirmed the righteous verdict which declared him guilty of official collusion in the Chorpenning fraud.

New Jersey answered the appeals of Secor Robeson and his followers by diminishing the Republican majority in the Legislature two-thirds at a single blow, and serving notice on the navy jobbers that their days are numbered.

Massachusetts, disgusted with the incompetency of Mr. Richardson, and resentful at the persecution of Mr. Sumner by the President and his menials, emphasized their discontent by withholding 60,000 of the votes which she polled twelve months ago for the Republican ticket.

GIVE ME A LOCK OF YOUR HAIR.

Nebraska Colonizing.

BY PROF. J. D. BUTLER.

LINCOLN, Nebraska,

When a French orator had finished an eloquent harangue to a Parisian crowd one of them cried out, "I should like a lock of that man's hair." The speaker was only too glad to grant the favor to an admiring auditor. But another—and another—and then scores, yes, hundreds, begged the same souvenir—which the politeness of the flattered Cicero would not let him refuse. In less time than the speech had consumed, the speaker was bereft of his hair—like a sheep beneath the shears, or Samson on the knees of Delilah.

The experience of the French demagogue has been that of Nebraska. Six years ago she stood before the world a boundless contiguity of unimproved prairie and offered a farm to everybody who would come and take it at a shilling an acre. The land was so good that the first man that saw it longed for it—as for an ambrosial curl of the Parisian orator. Others followed him, stood not on the order of their coming, but came at once and seized on lot after lot, with as much avidity as an Indian brave grasps a scalp-lock. Seekers of such Nebraska souvenirs have come from every State in the Union, and from every country in Christendom, except Greece and Portugal.

Behold the result! Nebraska, for two hundred miles west of Lincoln, its capital, is occupied all along the line of the Burlington and Missouri River Railroad. No more locks of hair remain to be given away to settlers there. But the State is as large as a European kingdom; and its free farms further west, as well as at little distances north and south of the railroad, are still as numerous as the hairs on most heads. Nebraska is as polite as the Frenchman, and will be as long as she has a lock of hair left.

Besides, 4,525 actual settlers have already secured each a farm, an aggregate of 478,988 acres of railroad land, either in Iowa or Nebraska, on ten years credit at 6 per cent interest. Their purchases lie where each alternate squaro mile has already been occupied by homesteaders. Thanks to those pioneers, the buyer of railroad land finds the region where he plants himself already half settled. The newest country is never more than half new. Railroad buyers are never out in the cold. They go west, but not out west.

Nothing of the principal of purchases made since 1872 is payable till the end of four years, and twenty per cent is thrown off for prompt improvement.

AMERICA'S THANKSGIVING HYMN.

Almighty Lord of Glory!
Our praise to Him we bring;
And chant our country's story,
Where God alone is King;
His outstretched arm sustaining,
Behold the Mayflower come!
His mercy foreordaining
Our land of Freedom's home.

Though wintry darkness gathers,
And dearth and death prevail,
The faithful Pilgrim Fathers
Could look within the veil;
O joy amid the sadness!
They're free to do and pray,
And keep in sober gladness
Their first Thanksgiving Day.

These seeds of Faith and Freedom
God's Word hath wafted free;
O'er rocks outsoaring Edom
They reach the Sunset Sea;
And East and West uniting,
One family become,
With North and South relighting
Love's lamp.—We're all at home!

With half of heaven above us,
An ocean on each hand,
We've room for all who love us,
And join our brother band;
Praising the Great All-Giver,
Our Home Feast we display,
And ever and forever
Keep free Thanksgiving Day.

In palace and in prison
Our Festival is one;
The witness Christ is risen—
Good-will for men begun;
Our hearts one hope rejoices,
Our souls in concert pray,
'Mid songs of choral voices—
God bless Thanksgiving Day!

THAT QUEER LITTLE MAN.

A Thanksgiving Story.

"This must be the house. No, 287 B. Court. Let me be sure! Where's the letter? Here it is in my coat pocket, of course; now for a gas-light. Yes, 287."

The queer little man folded the letter as he spoke, replaced it in his pocket, and knocked at the door of 287. It was after dark, on a dull evening in November, but the gas light, under whose friendly glare the letter had been consulted, shone upon the figure now standing at the door, and showed him to be a very odd figure indeed. His head was so many sizes too large for his body, that it made him look top-heavy, and this effect was certainly not diminished by the fact that he wore his hair long, thick, and curling, and a beard that fell almost to his waist. His clothes were coarse and ill made, but warm, and in good repair. His slight figure, small hands and feet, and quick movements, made the great head and wide-brimmed hat almost grotesque in their disproportionate size. Getting impatient, he gave a second knock at the door of the small house, and this time so long and loud that the door flew open before he had taken his hand from the knocker. A little girl stood in the entry, eyeing him with an expression that seemed to argue a debate in the mind whether to remain, and let the visitor come in, or to shut the door and run away.

"You take a good while to come to the door, ma'am," he said, and at once decided the question in the mind of the little girl. A voice and a smile like that could never belong to a cruel ogre who ate up little girls without salt or pepper, however big his head.

"Do you want to see Aunt Henrietta?"

"Who is Aunt Henrietta?"

"Miss Mosely. The lady who owns the house, and lets us board here."

"Oh! Yes, I want to see her."

"If you will walk in the parlor, she'll be in presently; she's gone to market," and a musical little gleeful laugh followed this announcement.

"Gone to market?"

"Yes, and Cora's gone too;" here the delight could not be suppressed. "They've gone to buy a turkey for to-morrow, and I'm taking care of the house and Eddy till they come back."

"Gone to buy a turkey for to-morrow?"

"Yes, it's Thanksgiving, you know? We are to have a treat. Aunt Henrietta promised it a week ago, and she never forgets, never!"

"She must be a famous aunt."

"Well," and here the little girl came close to her odd visitor and took a seat beside him, on the sofa, "she ain't our aunt really, you know; not our very, very own. But she's just as good to Cora and Eddy and me."

"Who is Cora?"

"Cora is my grown-up sister; she's ever, ever so old, almost nineteen. I'm ten, and Eddy is two and a half. Cora gives music lessons, and she is out almost all day, and Aunt Henrietta makes flowers, and I help her. Eddy plays."

"But where are your papa and mamma?"

"Papa died when Eddy was a wee baby, and we came here then to board with Miss Mosely. Mamma sewed all day, and Cora practiced. Then mamma died too, but Aunt Henrietta said we must stay, and manage the board somehow, for she would not let Cora go away to take care of us all alone. You see this ain't a very good house for boarders," and the little face looked very wise," and the front room has been empty a long time."

"Then Miss Mosely takes boarders?"

"Yes, indeed. We have the third story front, and Mrs. Manners, she goes out nursing and ain't here much, she has the third story back; Aunt Henrietta sleeps down here in the back parlor, so there is nobody at all in the second story. That was the reason Aunt Henrietta sent away the servant, and makes flowers for the milliners' stores. It takes so much money to feed us all, and buy our dresses and boots."

"But, my dear child, have you no uncles or aunts, nobody to help Sister Cora?"

"No! Uncle James Reed is in California, and of course he can't come. Cora wrote to him, but I guess he didn't get the letter. Anyhow he didn't answer it."

"Did you ever see him?"

"No, indeed! He went away when Cora was a baby and never came back, but he often sent money in a letter to mamma."

A knock at the door interrupted her.

"There they come! I'll tell Aunt Henrietta you are here," and away she ran, and was in another moment heard making anxious inquiry regarding the size and tenderness of the turkey.

A lady's voice answered her.

"There's a gentleman wants to see you, auntie," said the child. "I'll help Cora take the basket to the kitchen."

Miss Mosely at once went to to the parlor, and her odd-looking visitor rose to meet her. If he had expected to see an angular, hard-featured maiden lady, soured by disappointment, and hardened by the hard life of landlady in a small boarding-house, he must have been agreeably surprised. The little lady who so courteously greeted him was slight and delicate in figure, with the sweetest of faces, soft brown eyes, and waving brown hair. Her neat dress suited her face and her age, some thirty-five years, and her low-toned, clear voice was like pleasant music.

"Good-evening!" said the queer little man, "I understand you have some vacant rooms for boarders. I want a whole floor, if you can accommodate me, a bed-room and sitting-room. I want my dinner in the middle of the day, and I'm so used to my own way that I must have it, no matter what it costs; but I'm willing to pay for it. I shall keep your servant running up and down all the time I'm in the house, so please have one that has plenty of life and activity. Can I have the rooms ma'am?"

The little landlady was so taken by surprise by the appearance and rapid speech of her visitor, that she scarcely knew how to reply; like the little girl, she was prepossessed in favor of the sweet voice and smile, so she said:—

"Will you look at the rooms, sir?"

"Look at them! My trunks will be here presently, and I intend to sleep here to night."

"But," stammered the lady, "if they should not suit you?"

"They must! If they don't suit me, I'll pitch all the furniture out of the window, and get what does suit me. I'm not very rich, ma'am, but you can have your money every month in advance, and that's all the reference I can give you, for I am a stranger here. Will twenty-five dollars a week pay for both rooms?"

Had a gold mine opened at her feet, the little lady could not have looked more astonished. Her little rooms had never brought such a price as that.

"It is too much," she said, gently; "perhaps, if you are a stranger, you do not know that this is not a very aristocratic neighborhood, and you see the house is very small. My father built it for his own use; he was a house carpenter, and he left it to me. It is comfortable, sir, and I will try to make it pleasant for you, but the rooms are small, sir, and they are both bed rooms now."

"Never mind that? We'll soon get the right furniture in. As for the price, you'll soon find you'll have to earn it. I'm the most troublesome man you ever heard of. I want hot coffee in bed at six o'clock in the morning, and I eat—wait until you see me eat, I'll keep your girl busy, and, as I said before, I must have my own way. What is the name, ma'am, of the little girl who let me in?"

"Jennie Hill, sir."

"She's a bright little thing—an orphan, she tells me."

"Yes, sir. Her mother died here last summer. Will you see the rooms now, sir?"

"Certainly. We will go up now, if you please. Here is your first month's board," and he took from his pocket-book two crisp fifty dollar bills. My name is Jameson. By the way, to-morrow is Thanksgiving, and if I don't have roast turkey, oysters sauce, mince pies, and pumpkin tarts for my dinner, I shall eat up Miss Jennie, here," and he turned to the little girl just entering the room, and laughed merrily. Only for a moment though, for the little girl was followed by a young lady in deep mourning, whose appearance seemed to awaken an emotion deeper than merriment in the queer little man's mind. He bowed respectfully, and then said to Miss Mosely:—

"I will go to my room now, if you please."

Cora Hill was beautiful enough to account for more than mere passing admiration. Her brilliant complexion, short golden curls, and large blue eyes, were all more beautiful contrasting with her black dress; and the subdued air of sorrow and care on her face, was touching in one so lovely and so young. Mr. Jameson thought of her a great deal as he paced up and down the two little rooms, shaking his long shaggy hair, and chuckling to himself.

The next day Jennie and Eddy thought the reign of fairies had certainly come again. The great trunk they had seen carried up stairs to the queer little man's room, containe' marvellous story books, wonderful toys, and what seemed inexhaustible stores of confectionery. The Thanksgiving dinner was "enlarged and improved," by jars of most delicious preserves, and Miss Mosely was almost as much frightened as astonished at the arrival in the middle of the day of a basket containing oranges, nuts, candied fruit, plump oysters, and various other additions to the dinner, and also a stout, recent arrival from green Erin, who said "A quare little gentleman had tould her the lady wanted a girl," and who proved herself a treasure on the instant.

It sometimes proved to Miss Mosely, herself the gentlest of human beings, as if her new boarder must be insane, and again she could have worshiped him for his goodness to the children, who had become so dear to her own kind heart. The Thanksgiving dinner was the merriest of feats. Master Eddy, won at the first glance by Mr. Jameson's smile, made quaint speeches, in baby English, about the unusual profusion of good things, Jennie was radiantly happy, and seeing her brother and sister so pleased, brought a flush of pleasure to Cora's pale face, and a glad look into her blue eyes that had not been there since her mother died.

It was very soon evident that the house had received an inmate who carried sunshine with him. His rooms were fitted up speedily with beautiful taste, and Jennie was delegated the happy guardian of their cleanliness. Professing himself an ardent lover of music, he turned out of doors the tinkling old piano in the little parlor, and replaced it by a noble instrument, the first touch of which sent perfect thrills of delight through Cora's really artistic fingers. And on this he would play, till one could believe souls could be drawn from bodies by such music as followed his touch.

Henrietta Mosely, herself an orphan, with a very small income, had, from the day when Cora had lost her mother, resolved as far as possible to fill her place to the children, and had comforted the deathbed parting by this promise. Cora was very beautiful, so young and childlike, that it was a sickening thought to imagine her alone in a great city, poor and friendless. She had received a first-rate musical education, and had a few pupils in the immediate neighborhood, who were glad to get cheap tuition. She was too thankful to have even the small sum thus paid to her, to murmur at the wearisome drudgery it certainly was to spend hours in training clumsy fingers and dull minds over instruction books and jingling tunes, often having to submit to vulgar complaints, because pupils who had no more music in their souls than the miserable old instruments they played upon, could not play more tunes.

Jennie had left school to assist in the care of Eddy, and also to make artificial flowers, to help out the expenses. Miss Henrietta never let the children see that they were a heavy burden upon her slender purse, but the board Cora paid with nearly the whole of her earnings, did not really furnish food for three hearty young appetites.

The arrival of Mr. Jameson was a magic-working change. His board was a magnificent income in itself, in that quiet household. Jennie was sent to school, Eddy became Henrietta's special charge, now that Matilda, the Hibernian before mentioned, presided over the kitchen department, and Cora was carried at once to fairy-land, by being introduced to a world of music. Mr. Jameson took Henrietta, Jennie and Cora to every musical entertainment, and his useful hints and guidance were improving Cora in the selection of her own music and the management of her glorious young voice.

He did not rest until another change had been made. One day he came home with a roll of music to be copied for a friend, and Cora was instructed in this accomplishment, and furnished with sufficient employment, at fair prices, to allow her to give up one pupil after another, till all were provided with teachers who paid more attention to tunes and less to solid instruction.

When the spring opened, and fine days shone, Mr. Jameson had a delightful habit of coming suddenly to the door with a large, easy hack, bundling the whole family—Eddy included—inside, and driving far out into the lovely country, where he would produce mysterious luncheons, and picnic in shady spots, always full of fun, jest, and kindness.

It would make my tale too long, were I to attempt to describe half the eccentric kindness and generosity of the queer little man; his love for the children, his respectful attention to Henrietta, his tender care for Cora.

He had been an inmate of "287" for nearly a year, when one day he invited his landlady to take a walk with him, and thus accosted her:

"Miss Henrietta, I am thinking of getting married, and I want you to tell me how to furnish my house. Come in, and see it."

They had left the small streets long before he spoke, and stood before a large, handsome house, in a fashionable neighborhood.

"I mean to make this home as perfect as possible for my bride," he said, opening door after door; this must be Jennie's room, this for Eddy."

"Then it is Cora?" said Henrietta, and as she spoke her head sank, for she feared her kind friend was courting disappointment.

"Cora!" he cried: "ah, yes, Cora will live here, of course. Now will you help me? I must have carpets and curtains, crockery, and a thousand things of whose very names I am ignorant. I am anxious to move in time for a thanksgiving dinner to commemorate the day when I first saw—Cora."

Of course she would help him. They went from store to store, consulting, arranging, and ordering goods, the little lady feeling all the time as if she was in a dream, and must pinch her herself before she could wake up. The odd, lost feeling lasted all day, and when she came home, weary and pale, she shut herself in her own room, and tried to face calmly this terrible possibility. To lose Cora! to lose the children! and above all, to lose her eccentric boarder! How could she bear this loneliness that seemed threatening her. She had no claim, no right to complain. If Cora married a man whose generous love extended to the children, surely there could be no greater happiness for all. Mr. Jameson was noble and thoroughly good, that could not be doubted; but Henrietta felt half sadly, that if Cora married him, it would be for a home for the sake of the children, perhaps from respect and gratitude, but not from the loving impulse of her untried young heart.

The little old maid had no heart history of her own to guide her misgivings: she had lived a lonely life of slavery to a tyrannical, invalid father, and since his death the uneventful life of keeping a small boarding-house for the poorer class, always having women for inmates. Yet the woman's heart in her little frame, knew by its own instincts that this was a marriage that would bring misery, and not happiness. Cora was just twenty, Mr. Jameson certainly double that age. She was a dreamy girl, a musical enthusiast; he was practical, bustling, and energetic. Kind as he was to Cora, he could never fill her heart, of that Henrietta was convinced. Her forebodings were confirmed an hour later, when Cora came to her room to say good-night. The young girl was very pale.

"Auntie," she said, using the familiar name to which she had only the claim of love, "do you think, please do not laugh at me, do you think Mr. Jameson is—is wanting to marry me? You think I am unmaidenly," she said, in an agony of shame, "but he has been talking so strangely to me. He has bought a house, and he has been asking me how I would like to furnish a room, what I thought of different household arrangements, and puttidg odd questions, that seem as if they could have had but one meaning."

"And that was what?"

"That he meant to ask me to share his home."

"I think he does; Cora. Indeed, he told me the same thing."

"Be his wife!" Cora Hill's face was very pale as she said this.

"I think he will ask you, dear. He will be a kind, good husband, Cora."

"Too kind, too good to have me for a wife! I could respect him, I do now! I can give him gratitude beyond measure, and I could be dutiful and affectionate, but—Oh, help me, auntie, help me!"

"My darling, no one can help you."

"He is so good to Jennie, to Eddy. Such a brother for them should reconcile me to anything. For their sake I could marry him and be a good, true wife, I know that. But he deserves more than that!"

Sadly her listener echoed the words. He certainly deserved love for love when he married.

The friends talked together far into the night, but it was like a circle of conversation, returning ever to the same theme. When they separated, it was with a vague idea of waiting till the words were spoken that would force a decision, before the decision should be made.

The work of preparing the new home went forward rapidly. The loveliest of flowers were selected for a conservatory; Jennie was in ecstacies at being allowed to choose all the things for her own room; a guest chamber was prepared according to Cora's taste; a nursery arranged for Eddy, and before Thanksgiving all was ready, and the master of the house issued his invitations for a family dinner party, requesting as a favor that his lady guests would put aside their mourning for that day. Still the momentous words were not spoken.

Henrietta was in her own room, arranging her soft brown hair, and contemplating the glories of a new black silk dress, with rich blue satin trimmings, soft lace and pretty ribbons, when Cora tapped at the door.

"Let me come in; I am all ready, and the children have already started. The carriage will come back for you and I. Jennie looked very pretty in her crimson dress, and Eddy is a picture in his new suit of velveteens, and crazy over his first pair of pants."

"Your dress is becoming, too."

It was a silk of the most beautiful violet color, with a great deal of soft, white lace about it. In the golden curls the young girl had twisted violet ribbons, and the color suited her fair beauty admirably. But the ladies were very pale, and had no holiday smiles; they spoke but little, yet in each heart was a deep, unexpressed fear and sympathy.

They found their host waiting for them in a handsome drawing-room, and the children wandering about, admiring everything, especially their own reflections in the long mirrors.

But they could scarcely believe their own eyes when they looked at Mr. Jameson. Dressed with care and taste, his hair cut to the usual gentlemanly length, his beard gone, he looked like another man. The disproportionate size of his head seemed diminished one-half by the loss of the enormous mass of hair, and his smile had lost nothing of its charm, as he advanced to meet the ladies.

"It is time my masquerading ceased," he said, in gentle, courteous tones. "Come, my dear, will you read this letter?"

"This!" cried the astonished girl, "this is the letter I wrote to Uncle James Reed when mamma died."

"Exactly! That is the letter that brought me from San Francisco, and that you thought so unkindly left unanswered."

"And you are Uncle James?"

"I am your uncle, dear, and now plead for me that the lady who has so long given you an aunt's love and care, will in truth become your aunt. Can you, Henrietta, love this queer little man?"

Could she love hsm? He must have read the perfect happiness in her eyes, for he bent over her hand, and raised it to his lips.

"My whole life shall thank you," he said; and Cora took the children to the other end of the long room to tell them the wonderful news.

There were no pale cheeks or sad eyes in the group gathered round the table loaded with Thanksgiving luxuries. Cora was full of gleeful mischief—a new element in her conversation—and Aunt Henrietta full of blushing confusion at the new emphasis the children gave the familiar name. Jennie, now a young lady, declares to this day that from the very first she suspected there was some secret reason for the extraordinary kindness of "That Queer Little Man."

Thus, notwithstanding the ravages of war, and especially, the destruction of farm interests in the Southern States, the wool crop has increased about 40,000,000 within the last decade. This, considering the artificial stimulus to wool-growing by the tariff, which was afterward materially withdrawn, is a pretty fair showing for the production of that textile fabric.—Milwaukee Journal of Commerce.

Thanksgiving Day.

The eve of our annual Thanksgiving Day is drawing peacefully to its close. Strange, that though this day comes in the dreariest month of the whole year, yet a golden glory always seems clustering about it, and all the joyousness and the bright freshness, and the beautiful charm of spring-time seem concentrated in this one happy day; and our hearts instinctively swell with grateful thanks for all the blessings plentifully meted out to us by the merciful hand of our Heavenly Father, throughont the long but now dying year.

The spirit of Thanksgiving Day! who does not recognize its silent and pure presence? No matter how lonely one may be, however far removed from friends and home—where is held on this day the family reunion—still in your silent room, where you sit in loneliness, perhaps in grief, this peaceful and shining spirit glides noiselessly in, and its cheering presence sheds a golden glory around—you feel that you are not alone, and as if some loved friends had burst in upon you with their joyous welcome and beaming faces, your heart leaps with sudden gladness, and your sorrow is vanished as if by magic.

'Tis the holy spirit of Thanksgiving Day. It cheers every heart, and gathers up many tearful thanks—often silently offered—and wafts them on snowy wings to the starry home in the skies.

May its beautiful presence, on this day of the coming year, find all sorrowing hearts made happy, all desolate homes rejoicing, the lonely wanderer sheltered in his haven of rest. That all may offer up, in one grand melody, that glorious hymn to the Creator, "Glory be to God on high, and on earth peace, good-will toward men."

Particulars of the Shooting of Thirty-seven of the Virginius' Crew.

A Havana dispatch says: On Friday morning, the 7th, thirty-seven of the crew of the Virginius were brought on shore at Santiago de Cuba, and taken to prison, to remain there until their execution, which was ordered for that afternoon. Capt. Fry, a noble-looking old man, fully a head taller than the rest of the crew, when he met his men on the wharf previous to the march to the prison, saluted them all. The salute was returned with affection. At 4:45 Capt. Fry and thirty-six men and officers were publicly shot, despite the protest of all competent foreign authorities. The marines were seven minutes killing the wretched prisoners. It seemed as if they would never finish. At last the sailors marched off, and the troops filed past the long row of corpses. Then the dead-carts were hurried up, and loaded indiscriminately with the mangled remains.

The American Consul has done all that could have been done. Indeed, it was threatened that his exequatur would be withdrawn for his exertions in behalf of the prisoners. In an interview with Gen. Burriel, that officer yelled at him and otherwise treated him disrespectfully. The British Consul also made an ineffectual protest against the execution. It is reported that sixteen of the victims were British subjects.

A Curious Animal.

The Lepus Bairdii or Baird's Rabbit, is a very rare animal, and one of the most remarkable of mammalia. A single specimen was obtained by Dr. Hayden, in 1860, in the Wind River mountains, near the headwaters of the Yellowstone. Mr. C. H. Merriam, of the United States Geological Survey, was so fortunate as to secure five more specimens in a late expedition, and it is described in Hayden's Geological Report for 1872. A very curious fact relating to it is that all the males take part in suckling their young. Of the five specimens shot four were adult males, and all had large teats, full of milk, and showed evident marks of having been suckled. Although no females were obtained, dissection showed that these were no hermaphrodite. Cases are familiar to readers of medical journals in which in the human subject a flow of milk has been determined to the breast of old women, and even of men, by the putting to the breast an infant that needed nourishment. The readers of Dr. Livingstone's travels will remember that he mentions such cases among the natives of Africa. But we do not remember any other case among mammalia in which this is a rule. Among fowls it is not infrequent for the male to take his turn in hatching the eggs, and every one has seen bantam cocks leading about a brood of chicks in true motherly style.

One Victim of the Bank of England Forger.

The arrest in London of the young wife of Austin Biron Bidwell, one of Macdonnell's associates in the Bank of England forgery, was reported in this city yesterday. She was charged, before Mr. Vaughn, of Bond street, with concealing the birth of her child. She gave the name of Jane Georgiana Mary Bidwell, and said that she was married to her forger husband on the 8th of February last at the American Legation in Paris by Minister Washburne. She first became acquainted with Bidwell in London at an artist's reception, but did not know that he was a swindler until his arrest in March in Havana, whither she had accompanied him. She never spoke to him afterward. Her father was Col. Debreaux, a well-known officer in the British army, who died in Madras, India. Mrs. Bidwell is described as a beautiful blonde, 18 years old. She was ashamed of her child's paternity, and, it is claimed, she allowed it to perish.—New York Sun.

Naval Preparations.—A Washington dispatch of the 14th says: The Kansas has been ordered immediately to Santiago de Cuba, and will be commanded by Commander A. V. Reed. In addition to this vessel and the Mahopac and Manhattan, iron-clads, the Powhattan and Osippi will also be ordered to active service in the North Atlantic squadron. The War Department will strengthen the forts in the Gulf, having already taken measures for strengthening and additionally garrisoning Fort Jefferson, in Florida. It is the general opinion here that Congress, acting on the recommendation of the President, will promptly take action on the questions to be presented concerning our affairs with Cuba.

MANNA.

A THANKSGIVING POEM.

'Twas in the midnight that manna fell,
That fed the hosts of Israel.

Enough for each day's fullest store,
And largest need—enough, no more.

For willful waste, for prideful show,
God sent not angels' food below.

Still in our nights of deep distress
The manna falls our hearts to bless.

And, famished, as we cry for bread,
With heavenly food our lives are fed.

And each day's need finds each day's store
Enough. Dear Lord, what want we more?

Humorous.

What is the difference between a sailor and a a beer-drinker? One puts his sail up and the other puts his ale down.

A Danbury man awoke in the middle of the night to comment upon the extraordinary fact that the heaviest end of a match is its light end.

A Michigan paper recently closed an obituary notice with the misquotation, "Though dead, he yet squeaketh." The printer, apparently, wasn't minding his p's and q's.

An opponent of woman's rights to hold school offices says that she can't travel through snow-drifts with impunity. Why not let her travel with a horse and cutter, then?

"You ought to let me pass here free of charge, considering the benevolent nature of my profession," said a physician to a toll-gate keeper. "Not so," was the reply; "you send too many deadheads through here now." The doctor did not stop to argue the point, but paid his toll and passed on.

A Bennington daughter, whose domestic nature is equal to her natural simplicity, was invited by an Advent exhorter to join his sect, get her white robe ready and prepare to ascend. "I can't," the maiden replied, "father and mother are going up, and somebody must stay to see to the cattle."

A professor in one of the Philadelphia medical colleges habitually puts this simple conundrum to his class, whenever he can find a class to put it to: "If monsbomanthrayninone is obtained by the oxidation of trybomanthracent, what would result from the union of bihthaline with dilute dichlor, or dibromanthracene disulphuric acid?"

"Now, young people," said a professor of natural history to his class, "now then as to hens. A hen has the capacity of laying just 600 eggs, and no more, and she finishes the job in just five years. Now, what is to be done with her after that?" "Cut her head off and sell her for a spring chicken!" exclaimed an urchin whose father dealt in poultry.

A Western reporter thus describes the toilet of the belle at a late ball; "She was magnificent in a green calico over a crinoline full four inches larger than the rest of her apparel, a white apron with red strings, blue stockings, a yellow neck-ribbon, and white cotton gloves. Her redish hair was fastened in a pug behind, and well adorned with the tail feathers of the rooster she had for dinner."

How Eggs are Hatched.

People have an idea that the hen sits on the eggs for a time, and when the time comes for hatching the chick bursts forth. There never was a greater mistake. The chick, until liberated from the shell by outside aid, is as incapable of motion as if it formed a solid egg, which it nearly does. You might as well enclose a man in an iron boiler, and tell him to get out of the shell without help. The chick grows on the inside of the shell, until at last the excrescence on the point of the beak of the bird presses against the inside of the shell, and bursts up a very small scale. Of course when it does this, it at the same time "breaks in that spot" the inside of the egg. This admits the air; in a short time it breathes and gets strength to cry loudly. The hen then sets to work to liberate it; she brings it forward under the feathers of the crop, and supporting it between the breastbone and the nest, begins the work of setting it free. She hitches the point of her beak into the hole formed by the raising of the scale by the chick's beak, and breaks away the egg-skin or shell all aronnd the greatest diameter of the egg. The joint efforts of the hen without and the chick within then liberate the prisoner, and he struggles into existence, and gets dry under the feathers and the natural heat of the hen. All female birds which sit on their eggs to hatch them have the hook in the beak strongly developed. Even the broad-billed duck and goose have those hooks specially developed and with them they liberate their young. In Australia, where everything seems to be by contraries, it is the cock of the bush turkey that hatches the eggs, and not the hen. It would be interesting to know whether the hook of the beak is better adapted for this service in the male bird than in the female. The hook of the beak of the ordinary cock of the common fowl is quite different from that of the hen—it is adapted for wounding in fighting, but not for hatching of eggs.

As to the effect of the recent financial disturbances, there can be no doubt that to the people at large it will be a beneficial one. We have been spending more money than we could afford, and we are retrenching, that is all. That this enforced retrenchment will be of ultimate advantage to us there can be no doubt, though it is equally certain that a good deal of distress to the poorer classes will be incidental to it. It behooves us to do what we can to make the sum of that distress as small as possible, and the surest way of doing that is to keep our spirits up and to keep business of all sorts moving as actively as we can; not hoarding money, which hoarded is useless, but using it judiciously, so that while we are securing ourselves against want, we may not deprive others of the work that is to bring them wages.—Hearth and Home.

A clergyman in Dundee, Scotland, has announced for his congregation that, in consequence of his inability to afford coal for his study fire, he has discontinued studying, and will preach his old sermons until coal can be procured.

Remote Causes of the Panic.

The trouble with us is our immense mass of indebtedness, both foreign and domestic. It must never be forgotten that by far the larger part of that indebtedness is the direct effect of the inflation of our currency. Our imports for the year ended June 30, 1868, to the year ended June 30, 1873, amount in gold to $3,113,126,464. Our exports during the same period, in gold amount to $2,834,585,905. To the imports should be added a large toll for the use of British ships. At the beginning of 1867 we were already heavily in debt to Europe, so to that the round three hundred millions we have run behind since then must also be added each year a large additional sum for interest. Let us now consider our domestic debts. These include the bonds of railroad and other corporations, mortgages on farms and other real estate—many of them dating back to war times—and the loans and discounts of the national banks. The latter amounted in April, 1873, to $908,000,000.

We are now exporting more than we importing; (1) because we are selling very cheap; (2) because the English have experienced a tremendous rise in prices, and we are not able to pay for their wares; (3) the English, being already somewhat in trouble from short crops, labor unions, scarcity of coal, etc., and foreseeing a great deal more, are drawing in and refusing to buy our securities as they have been doing for the last five or six years. Now our farmers are already in trouble because we are selling their stuff so cheap. The English are getting more and more in troubles every day, and we, in the great cities, expect to be as prosperous and extravagant as ever.

All we need, the doctors tells us, is a little more green paper! Not so. We must come down to bread and water and pay our debts. We have no choice in the matter. We must continue to send out of the country more valuable things than we bring into the country, until John Bull gets on his legs again. —John Bull is sick, and the farmers are sick, and the trade of peddling railroad bonds is annihilated. The reverse we have met with is simply the beginning of the inevitable transition from prosperous to pinching times.—New York Tribune.

Apply the Remedy.—It appears that we need no longer be tormented with Liver, Kidney, Bladder, and Glandular diseases, Mental and Physical Debility, Partial Paralysis, Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism, Dyspepsia and Morbic Humors of the blood. Dr. Walker's Vegetable Vinegar Bitters conquers the causes of all of the above irregularities by securing perfect digestion, a proper flow of bile, and a free discharge of all waste matter. It is not a vile doctored whisky, gotten up to deceive the public and tickle the palate. It is a medicine to the sick stomach, the relaxed nervous system, the weak circulating blood, and the overworked, prostrated brain. An infant may take it, and to children afflicted with worms, and even adults who suffer from this cause, ignorant of the fact—and their numbers are millions—it is the greatest remedy of the age. Take one bottle and you will be satisfied that this is no catch-penny nostrum—[Com.

A Distressing Suggestion.—The owner of a new mustache was on the train down the other day, says the Danbury News. He gave up all his attention to his lip. First he would push the contents upward, and then stroke them downward. Again, he would pull out the ends and go through motions calculated to make it part in the middle. Finally a bushy bearded man in a seat opposite leaned across the aisle and observed in a friendly whisper, yet loud enough to be heard through the car: "Don't you want to get one or two good hairs to breed from?"

The National Life Insurance Company of the United States of America—chartered by Congress—issued in October $1,115,000 of new insurance, a larger amount than in any previous month, save one, since July, 1869. This shows the public appreciation of this strong stock Company.—[Com.

We desire to call the special attention of the public to Vulcanized Rubber-Coated Iron Tube.

Also, all the various Fittings required in connection with the same, under Finley's Patent, which we have been testing with entire success for the past two years, and are now ready to place on the market, thoroughly satisfied that wherever it may be introduced for the passage of natural waters, either hot or cold, its merits will be acknowledged over either galvanized Iron or Lead Tubes, which are now extensively used for such purpose, and to which in many localities, decided prejudice exists. The absolute indestructibility of Vulcanized Rubber, also its purity for the purpose to which we adapt it, is so well known that comment is unnecessary.

We append a letter from the celebrated chemists, Booth & Garrett, who have been kind enough to test the article for us.

The price will be the same as for galvanized iron tube and fittings, subject to the most liberal trade discounts.

We are also prepared to supply "Tongs," designed especially for this article so that it can be screwed up to its place without injuring the coating. Asking your orders respectfully,

Established in 1836.

Philadelphia, February 12, 1873.

Messrs. MORRIS, TASKER & CO., Philadelphia:

Dear Sirs—We have made a careful examination of your Rubber-Coated Iron Pipe, in order to determine its resistance to heat and cold, to steam, to natural waters, and have even extended our researches to acids, alkali and burning gas. We may mention that the coating is a similar compound to that constituting gums for holding artificial teeth, excepting that yours contains no mercury.

It will bear a high degree of heat, over 300 degrees Fahrenheit, as might be inferred from its having been prepared at above 300 degrees. It was not affected by boiling for several hours in Schuylkill water. City gas passing through it for about three days appeared to have no effect on it.

The rubber coating resisted firmly carbonic acid water, moderately dilute sulphuric and muriatic acids and caustic potash solution. Solutions of neutral salts have no action on it.

Since the rubber coating exhibited such firm resistance to acids, alkali, salt and heat, it is clear that it will offer a still stronger resistance to all natural waters, in which some of the above ingredients are found in a less exaggerated, i. e., in a more dilute state.

In fine, we congratulate you for finding a coating for iron tubes and articles of iron generally, which is so unusually resistant to any of the usual agents of the chemists, and to those ordinary agents which so affect iron coated with other materials in a greater or less degree.

Respectfully yours, BOOTH & GARRETT.

Ayer's Hair Vigor,
FOR RESTORING GRAY HAIR
To its Natural Vitality and Color.

Advancing years, sickness, care, disappointment and hereditary predisposition, all turn the hair gray, and either of them incline it to shed prematurely.

Ayer's Hair Vigor, by long and extensive use, has proven that it stops the falling of the hair immediately; often renews the growth, and always surely restores its color, when faded or gray. It stimulates the nutritive organs to healthy activity, and preserves both the hair and its beauty. Thus brashy, weak or sickly hair becomes glossy, pliable and strengthened; lost hair regrows with lively expression; falling hair is checked and stablished; thin hair thickens and faded or gray hair resume their original color. Its operation is sure and harmless. It cures dandruff, heals all humors, and keeps the scalp cool, clean and soft—under which conditions, diseases of the scalp are impossible.

As a dressing for ladies' hair, the Vigor is praised for its grateful and agreeable perfume, and valued for the soft luster and richness of tone it imparts.

WEEKLY WISCONSIN,
THE Great Northwestern Newspaper,
AT REDUCED RATES!

The Weekly Wisconsin will soon enter upon its Twenty-eighth Volume. It is the leading weekly newspaper of the vast and productive region lying west of Lake Michigan—the garden of the Northwest. Since the Wisconsin commenced its weekly visits to the people of the Northwest, their numbers in the region designated have increased from half a million to more than three millions!

The proprietors of the Weekly Wisconsin have always endeavored to keep their journal up with the advancing spirit of the times, in its editorial management; and have anticipated the demands of the growth of the country, and the material interests of their readers. From a small newspaper twenty-eight years ago, we have increased the Weekly Wisconsin to a 48-column—quarto—larger than the New York Ledger, or the New York Weekly.

It is our determination to cover the whole field demanded of a first-class family journal. All its departments are under the charge of competent editors, and no expense is spared that can add to its desirability as a Newspaper.

For the year to come we shall continue our feature of running a serial story—completing and publishing from three to four novels, the cost of which would be twice the subscription price of the paper for the year. This great feature does not infringe upon the completeness of other departments; but is entirely extra, and beyond what is usually given the readers of a weekly newspaper.

In order to anticipate the financial demands of the times, and to meet the spirit of economy that will more or less have to be practiced for a time, we have reduced the rates of the Weekly Wisconsin to a

GOLD BASIS,

Payable in currency. Our new rates are as follows:

The Sun.

NEW YORK, 1873-4. WEEKLY, SEMI-WEEKLY, AND DAILY.

THE WEEKLY SUN is too widely known to require any extended recommendation; but the reasons which have already given it fifty thousand subscribers, and which will, we hope, give it many thousands more, are briefly as follows:

It is a first-rate newspaper. All the news of the day will be found in it, condensed when unimportant, at full length when of moment, and always presented in a clear, intelligible, and interesting manner.

It is a first-rate family paper, full of entertaining and instructive reading of every kind, but containing nothing that can offend the most delicate and scrupulous taste.

It is a first-rate story paper. The best tales and romances of current literature are carefully selected and legibly printed in its pages.

It is a first-rate agricultural paper. The most fresh and instructive articles on agricultural topics regularly appear in this department.

It is an independent political paper, belonging to no party, and wearing no collar. It fights for principle, and for the election of the best men to office. It especially devotes its energies to the exposure of the great corruptions that now weaken and disgrace our country, and threaten to undermine republican institutions altogether. It has no fear of knaves, and asks no favors from their supporters.

It reports the fashions for the ladies, and the markets for the men, especially the cattle markets, to which it pays particular attention.

Finally, it is the cheapest paper published. One dollar a year will secure it for any subscriber. It is not necessary to get up a club in order to have THE WEEKLY SUN at this rate. Any one who sends a single dollar will get the paper for a year.

THE WEEKLY SUN.—Eight pages, fifty-six Columns. Only $1.00 a year, no discounts from this rate.

THE SEMI-WEEKLY SUN.—Same size as the Daily Sun. $2.00 a year. A discount of 20 per cent. to Clubs of 10 or over.

THE DAILY SUN.—A large four page newspaper of twenty-eight Columns. Daily Circulation over 120,000. All the news for 2 cents. Subscription price 50 cents a month, or $6 a year. To Clubs of 10 or over, a discount of 20 per cent.

The Auburn Courier

Thursday Nov. 27, 1873.

Wm. M. Tweed, the "boss" thief of New York, is about to receive a slight punishment for his stealing proclivities. A jury found him guilty and he was sentenced last Saturday to 12 years in the county jail and a fine of $12,750.

The Cuban affair is still creating some excitement, but we do not think war will be the result. We publish an article from the pen of one of our citizens, on the subject, whose sympathy seems to be in favor of Spain We ain't got much for a nation, claiming to be civilized, that will butcher people by the wholesale, as she did in the Virginius affair. We don't care whether that vessel was a privateer or not, such butchery should and is not pardonable with nations claiming to be civilized. Let them be punished.

THE CUBAN WAR.

Mr. Editor—The excitement incident to the execution by the Spanish Authorities of a portion of the crew of the Virginius, recently, has produced an intense feeling in the United States, and apparently so in England. This excitement is somewhat characteristic of the American people, and this spirit of revenge, of punishment, this demand for blood, and this war cry, is only equal to the ferocity (so claimed) which the Spaniards meted to those they captured and executed. It is as ill-timed, hasty and indecent as that which is sought to be avenged. This undue feeling and spirit of revenge and insatiate desire for Spanish blood without mature reflection and correct judgment, is as much to be condemned as the acts complained of and which originated it

It seems to me the American people are too hasty, and have formed conclusions either on an improper basis and before all the facts are heard, or they wholly ignore other facts which are given, only for the purpose of fiiring the American mind. Some foolishly think, and so they act, that, as in the late rebellion money was issued and circulated to repletion, and a large number of citizens rose to high places of emolument and honor, so thousands now are eager for the fray with Spain, expecting like favors and honors. Now what are the facts and why this cry of war and blood? Is it not a matter of history and is conceded on all hands, that a rebellion has been going on in Cuba against the legally constituted government for five years; that thousands of the disaffected Cubans have sought our shores only for protection and the furtherance of the cause of the insurrectionists? Is it not also a fact, as established by the evidence so far that the Cubans on our shores were in league with the rebels on that island, bought and owned the Virginius and the munitions of war she carried, and hired and paid the crew to assist those rebels in their insurrectionary war? The Virginius sailed under the American flag, but it was false, she had American clearance papers, but they were false too. The United States does not and dare not say they were genuine. Nor is it claimed by any one but that her cargo was entirely contraband of war. The crew do not and did not, nor does any one deny that their sole object was that of assistance to the rebels in Cuba. Now the Virginius had a false flag and false papers from a British port to a South American one. The Spaniards knew of the succor she intended giving the insurgents. They found her, it is true, in neutral waters, sailing a direction precisely contrary to her clearance papers, within a short distance and going directly toward Santiago, where she was to land her crew, unload her cargo, and where the rebels had been expecting her for some time. When hailed by the Spanish man-of-war, Tornado, she fled for safety, threw overboard her munitions of war, was captured without esistance, and with no denial as to er and her crew's destination and bject. These facts indubitaby show hat the crew was outside the protection of civil law, and were simply ither marauders or pirates or aiders the Cuban insurrection, and if the tter, all they were entitled to was, a ial by court martial and execution cording to miliiary usages. No one, think, will deny the right to Spain protect her citizens, possessions and in such an extremity as this, and der these circumstances,

It is said some of the men executed were American citizens. Suppose they were. But were they entitled to our protection when sailing under false colors and seeking to wage war against a friendly government? Dare we protect them and thereby espouse their cause? Shall we, in the face of international law and our treaties, permit, protect and uphold citizens who menace and carry on war against a country we have in the most solemn manner promised to be neutral with and to support and defend? Should one foreigner or a hundred of them come to our shores, and rob and murder our citizens, would we not have and assert the right to punish them according to our laws? Then why not permit other countries to have the same right of protection, and especially a friendly government to punish any of our citizens for crimes committed on their soil, and against their tranquility and nationality? I can think we, as a nation, are willing to become the apologists, aiders and abettors of marauders, pirates and insurgents. It we do, then we should be classed with those who promise one thing and do another.

We made England pay us fifteen and a half millions for the wrongs committed by the Alabama. That vessel had up a British flag, had British papers, but what were her crew and object? If we rightfully made England pay that sum, it was because the Alabama and her crew were in the wrong; and if they were wrong, then why is it that the Virginius and her crew were not wrong also? And if the rule that was established at Geneva in the Alabama claims arbitration should be applied to us, we would have become directly responsible for all the acts the Virginius and her crew might have done.

But some say the whole English press demand that we should resent the insult given our flag, and that we are cowards if we do not. It should be admitted that it is always well to listen to the advice of our friends, as well as to heed the sayings of our enemies, and voluntary advisors. But we are not obliged to act on the advice. Let us see if England's advice is good and given in good faith, or if there is not some secret motive or if there is not some treacherous design? The United States were the first to acknowledge the independence of the Republics of France and Spain from monarchial rule. Should those republics succeed and become firmly established, the British crown would soon succumb and the English lion would be caged and rendered entirely harmless. A war by us now with Spain would drive every republican in Spain back to the Carlists, it would stifle and kill the Republic of France, weaken the growing sentiment of Republicanism all over Europe, and give the crowned heads of Europe a life time lease. And in such an event, at the veriest pretext, while coping with the marine forces of Spain, which are equal to if not greater than ours, every monarchial government would desire our overthrow, if not actually assist in it. And then who would be acle to tell the consequences? England, jealous of the prosperity of our country, the popularity of our institutions at home and abroad, and smarting under the defeat in the Geneva arbitration, would do almost anything to have revenge, to incite us to trouble, have us act inconsistent with the rule established by that arbitration, and possibly compel us to repay the award.

But it is said by some that the punishment meted out to the insurgents was hasty and summary. It may have been. It might have seemed a little more decorous to have permitted them a few more days to live, but it would have done them no good nor given us any consolation. If they were guilty as above stated, then what and wherein is the difference? The emergency in which Spain is now placed, having troubles at home as well as in Cuba, may have necessitated prompt and decisive action. Suppose England, in our late conflict, had blockaded our ports and landed men on our shores to assist the South, what would we have done with them, as well as England? what have we heretofore done with such characters, and what did we with Major Andre, of Revolutionary war notoriety.

Others say that the crew of the Virginius ought to have been turned over to us for punishment, or at the least our government ought to have been permitted to defend them on trial. All that can be said in answer is that it is an unheard of rule, that if a nation capture individuals in acts of piracy or in rebellion against that nation the punishment should be left to the nation they claimed to be citizens of. We, as a nation, certainly would not submit to such a rule.

In this matter we should use more discretion, and form our judgments so that they will bear the test of law and order, be based upon the treaties, good faith and international law, and not permit our acts to be inconsistent with our precedents and our own rights and demands.

There may be another feature of the question. Appearances from the recent elections and other indications manifest the early downfall of the Administration party, upon whose shoulders is placed the enormous national debt, our financial troubles, Credit Mobilier, back pay stealings, etc. Possibly the leaders are unscrupulous enough to have originated this whole fray to attract the attention of the American people from their own crimes to something else. Does it not look a little like raising the cry of "stop thief," expecting immunity thereby?

T. B. Totten will open out a Hat and Cap and Gents Furnishing Store in Hebel's corner lately occupied by the jewelry store He will be ready for business next Saturday.

Abright & Shepherd have put up fine window curtains in the large show windows of their store. They are splendid and come from Davenport & Co.

C. H. Jones, leader of the Fort Wayne Band, has been appointed business agent of the Cleveland Herald. Charley being an old typo will be found at home in the business

Have you seen the big snake at the jewelry store? Its a monster.

St. Nichols for December is really a present for the little folks. You that have nothing for your children to read, should get a copy at the Post-office just to see how they will enjoy it.

Whittington's team frightened by a copy of the Press lying in the street, made a dash southward last Friday, breaking the tongue and several other things, when it was stopped.

FURS.—A new stock of most handsome Furs has been received at Miller & Casebeer's. Furs will be in great demand this winter, and those wanting to purchase should call immediately while they are low.

That delightful Magazine, Scribner's Monthly, is received for December. It is profusely illustrated, and is a publication that will interest every one. Every family should have a copy. Order it at the post office.

The Saginaw Railroad authorties have been putting in a lot of gravel around the depot, and things look better. Now they want a good platform for freight delivery to make it more convenient for our shippers.

Now is the time to select your toys at the jewelry store.

We were glad to meet on the excursion those popular gentlemen, C. A. King, V. Hamilton, M. O. Waggoner, T. A. Slack and others who received our committee with so much encouragment at Toledo last spring.

It is so healthy at Butler that tomb stone cutters have concluded that they have no calling in this direction and we are without this branch of art.—Butler News.

Waterloo, we believe, has the only one in the county.

The Valparaiso Messenger comes to us this week in the same shape of the COURIER, with its pages one column larger, containing more reading matter than any other paper in the State. The Messenger is being crowned with success.

Our wholesale grogg shop, on Seventh street, suffered an attack from the outside last Saturday evening. Sash and glass were broken. Though our grievances may be great this is not the proper way redress to them. Let law and order prevail.

Go and see the little lady with the golden hair at Abright & Shepherd's.

Our readers will please notice the announcement of Wm. Long & Co. in another column. These gentlemen succeed Rush & Buchanan in the trade, and come well recommended and deserve our patronage. They will keep a first class stock of furniture, and manufacture to order, and all should throw as much trade to their door as possible.

We are in receipt of the inital number of the Butler News, published by R Weamer, Esq., late of Angola. It is a neat little six column paper, and will be devoted to the interest of our enterprising neighboring town. Butler promises much in the near future, and we don't see why an enterprise of this kind may not be sustained. We wish the News success.

T. IN. L.

TWO CITIES FRATERNIZE.

INCIDENTS, ETC

We were surprised to see a train of five passenger coaches bound westward, draw up at our station on T[illegible]day of last week, and still more surprised to learn that the Toledo city council, Board of Trade, and other good citizens of that enterprising city of the lake, were aboard on their way to Logansport, where once the red man, &c. Being at the depot we accepted an invitation to join the expedition, and soon made the acquaintance of as jolly a set of emigrants as can be found only in Toledo. At Columbia City, a committee of twenty-five headed by the Mayor from Logansport with a good band received their guests in due form. President Collins made a few remarks and was unanimously cheered. But our engine was restless, and away she bounded again, under the careful Eckly, stopping but briefly at the different points along the line, until Logan was reached. The visitors were notified that dinner would be ready for them at the Adams house and as the afternoon was half gone this announcement was received with a relish characteristic only of a grain feed city.—A little delay and one hundred filled the tables, while others sought restaurants and other points for this accommodation. The dinner was good, and Mayor McFadden presided over the champaign with accustomed gravity.

In the evening a formal reception took place at the Opera House. Mayor McFadden made a neat speech of welcome touching briefly on the early history of Logansport. The city was situated on middle ground, the Pottawatomies on the north and the Miamees on the south, both nations holding union pow-wows on the island on which the city was located. The gleaming tomahawk had been buried, and where once was desolation, now could be seen the rich grain fields of the lower Wabash.

Mayor Jones, of Toledo, responded as follows:

MAYOR JONES' SPEECH.

MR. MAYOR AND GENTLEMEN: We thank you for the very cordial greeting you have given us to-day. We have known you intimately since 1830, when the Wabash & Erie Canal was completed. We got a little better acquainted when the Toledo Wabash Railroad was finished We have come here on the invitation of your muncipal authorities and the President of the Eel River Railroad, to look at your broad plains and fertile valleys, and satisfy ourselves of your prosperity. In the language of the Pagan queen, "The half has not been told." Thriving towns and prosperous cities, and a happy and contented rural population have greeted us. Within the recollection of the most here present, you have redeemed a territory sufficient for an empire from its savage wilderness. You have become the center of a civilization which vies with the older States of the Republic in its perfection. You are situated midway in the great winter wheat producing belt of this Continent—that kind of wheat which affords nourishment for the most intellectual and physical triumphs of which man capable. The triumphs you have made within our recollection have indeed been marvelous, and give us every assurance that there is no limit to the material progress which may be expected of you in the immediate future. You have given us an example of the indomitable energy of your people in the building of the Eel River Road, another iron link which connects you with us, and which we hope will cement in relations of amity and commerce more firmly than the iron links which extend between the two cities.—The material progress of our own city hardly antidates your own. One of our citizens who is with us, and who used to run the packet boats upon the Canal, tells us that in 1854 your city was as large as our own. We have steadily kept pace with the advancing progress of the west and although just putting off our swaddling clothes, our commerce amounts to $5,000,000 a year, our manufacturers to many millions more, and our population to 50,000. We are situated upon most of the great lakes in a direct line towards tidewater through the St. Lawrence, which is already becoming the highway of the nations. Already our corn and wheat sent from your grain areas, feeds the millions of the Old World, and serves to the vital energies which you expect in building your Railroads and developing the country's resources. Our motto is "onward," and we rely upon your aid. The welcome you gave us is a guarantee that we shall not want your support. We have come to see how you live and renew our acquaintance."

Quite a number of others present made remarks and the occasion was an enjoyable one. The meeting adjourned, but many of the visitors were entertained long after. C Gerber, Esq., the red hot Dutch man off dot Toledo, made things lively at the Red Men's hall with the Great Western Band and the accession to his party was formidable when Mansfield put in an appearance, and a serenading they went. Everybody was happy, but none drunk, a proposition scarcely creditable in this day and age of the world, yet we make the assersion with much confidence—in our ability to prove that such was the case.

We were quartered at the Gehring House, though most of the party remained at the Adams, where they enjoyed first-class prices if nothing else. We pronounce the Gehring the best house in the city, and the landlord the embodiment of good humore and liberality. He furnished a handsome lunch for the return trip and conferred a favor upon all, and a special few who had not seen a good bite for a week. Our excellent friend Agnew of Butler, furnished the cigars, and it was remarkable to see how many smoked.—There was no smoking car on the train except the last five coaches. There was something particularly enjoyable in eating and smoking at the same time.

The next morning we visited all the printing offices, with the bands, the Pharos, the Star, the Sun and Journal all good, live papers, sufficient to keep the natives well posted. We were pleased to meet our excellent friend Willard Nash and were gratified to return his visit of a year ago. We put Willard down as the most popular man in the city.

We met Bennett, lovely Dan, the great cyastecutus of the newspaper kingdom, the last living relic of a primeval age.—Dan is politically and morally nowhere, as a glance at his corporal ponderosity would soon convince you.

At 10 o'clock the excursionists were again seated in the cars, all well satisfied with the kind attention they had received and with the city and its surroundings. We saw her in her worst dress, in the season of mud, and there was something pleasant in her looks. No doubt of its being attractive and beautiful in fine weather. The future of Logansport is promising and more advancement will be made in the next five years than has been realized in the last fifteen. Energy and enterprise has gained a footing, and when once thoroughly established old foggyism and everything else must give way before them.

The return trip was successive of happy incidents too numerous to mention—Those agile creatures, Mansfield and Gerber, like budding flowers came forth at each stopping place, and with a modesty becoming only a tender maiden they yielded to the cries of the populace and chasseaed up and down the platform, and as their footfalls tinkled on the tufted floor and their sylph-like forms flitted from one and to the other, there were cheers, my countrymen, the echoes of which have as yet scarcely died away.

We take the following form the Telodo Commercial's report of the excursion:

"At the end of this we came to Auburn,—"not now perhaps the loveliest village of the plain," but bidding fair to attain to honorable mention in that connection before a great while. It is the junction of the Eel River with the Ft Wayne, Jackson and Saginaw Railroad, and was for a long time the only outlet of the Eel River country. Was laid out in '35, but did not assume much importance until the completion of the Eel River Road in 1870.—It has now a population of nearly 2,000.

It has a number of fine business blocks, and a very nice court house, while its dwellings are generally of the better style. Among its many manufactories is a Hub and Spoke factory, a Stave factory a Sash factory, a Knitting factory, Woolen factory and Steam Saw Mill. It has a number of fine churches and the I. O. O. F. has recently dedicated a very fine Hall. It has a live weekly paper, called the COURIER, edited by T. C. Mays, formerly of the Fort Wayne Sentinel. A crowd of over 100 were assembled on the platform, despite the driving storm.

Our bands struck up as we approached the depot. We were received with rousing cheers and on stopping Mr. Mays introduced Major S. W. Sprott who said:

"FRIENDS AND STOCKHOLDERS OF THE EEL RIVER RAILROAD, RESIDING AT TOLEDO It is with pleasure that I, as Representative of our road, now introduce you upon entering the "Hoosier" State and the line of our road, to the citizens of this beautiful place—the capital of DeKalb County—Auburn. Here is where the project of building this enterprise first originated—where it had its first headquarters, its first president, and all times noble and steadfast friends, such as the late lamented R. J. Dawson and Wesley Park, and the honored names of Judge John Morris, John Hubble and others who still live.—Twenty years ago they resided in this County, and have given their hard earnings and earnest endeavors to secure to you, their neighbors and children, the benefits which they saw in the construction of a Road through the most fertile portion of this State to your doors, the Lake waters, thereby obtaining the cheapest and most direct route for the transportation of their produce and merchandise, which we are realizing to-day."

Three cheers were given for Auburn, which were responded to by three cheers for Toledo.

FREE OF CHARGE.—Call at W. & E. T. Martin's Drug Store and get a sample bottle of Dr. A. Boschee's German Syrup, Free of Charge. It has lately been introduced in this country from Germany, and for any person suffering with a severe cough, heavy cold settled on the breast consumption or any disease of the throat and lungs it has no equal. Our regular size bottles 75 cents. In all cases money will be promptly returned if perfect satisfaction is not given. Two doses will relieve any case. Try it.

Do you love your children? Then buy them something that will please them, at Abright & Shepherd's.

Sim Tarney has furnished us with a big turkey for Thanksgiving. Sim is the popular meat merchant of Main street.—He keeps things as neat and clean as a pin, and puts no dog meat in his Bologna He does nothing by halves as the size of our turkey plainly indicates.

We must say that our enterprising merchants, Messrs Miller & Casebeer are building up a fine trade in the Dry Goods line. Almost every week new goods are received to meet the demand of their customers. Last week another large lot was opened out and their store is now jammed with every thing that one could wish.—Go and see and satisfy yourselves. They are actually competing with Fort Wayne in prices and quality of goods.

Musical instruments, from a jewsharp to a piano, at Abright & Shepherd's.

The Sunday school concert last Sabbath evening suffered an infliction in the way of a long article that tired out the most patient. When will those who essay to entertain, get a correct idea of time. Mr. Faurot, altough a pleasant reader, worried his hearers very much by his long reading of the "Idiot Boy," before the Institute. Such persons have something to learn yet.

TIRED OF LIFE.—The wife of Mr. Moore, one of our citizens, living in the south part of town, purchased some arsenic at Davenport & Co.'s Drug Store, last Monday, saying she wanted to kill some mice. She took it home and concluded that she could rid herself of the mice by taking it herself, and down it went kerchug. There was no funeral, but it is confidently asserted that there was a first-class case of eruption from the stomach, and she will recover. Jealously is said to be the cause.

The little folks can be suited now in the large stock of toys just received at the jewelry store.

The New York Observer takes a bold stand against gift enterprises in the shape of picture premiums, offered to subscribers and said to be worth so much more than the price of a periodical. The Observer does not publish pictures but publishes news. Any person desiring a comprehensive newspaper, filled with just the news that every family wants, and free from any clap-trap, or objectionable matter of any kind; will hardly do better than by sending $3 to S. I. Prime & Co., 37 Park Row, New York.

Auburn Gallery.

MR. EDITOR:—I wish to say a few words to the public about picture matters, thro the medium of you paper.

It has been generally understood by the people in Auburn, and surrounding country, that I would take pictures this winter in the new gallery, in the Ensley block, and many have been waiting for their pictures until that period, and I have repeatedly advised my customers to wait, expecting it would be finished early in the fall as promised, but after waiting patiently, have been disappointed

I have now secured the gallery in Mr. Case's building, and after more than a year's sickness, misfortune and bitter disappointment, am again prepared to take pictures in good style. I have associated with me Mr. J. L. Roth, who has been in the business less than a year, and is a better artist than many who have worked at it for years. We are prepared to do all kinds of work in photograpy, large and small.

We have been the first in the county to introdude photographs from retouched negatives, a new style, and destined to supercede all others.

We intend to make fine work a speciality and will give our patrons the benefit of all new styles in the art, and will make as good pictures as are produced in large cities, and at much lower prices.

I desire all my old customers to come and see us, examine specimens, learn prices, etc. We hope by fair dealing and the production of first-class work to secure the patronage of everybody.

G. W. GORDON.

If you want to make a beautiful present to your friend, don't fail to see those Bohemian goods at the jewelry store.

Do Not! Do Not!! Do Not!!!

Do not employ such physicians as give you opium laudanum, morphine or hydrate of chloral to stop your pain or cough, as those narcotics will not cure the disease, but only lull you to certain death with a false hope. But call or send to Dr. S. Clay Todd, No. 4 East Columbia street, Fort Wayne, who will give you immediate relief by removing the cause of the disease, and there will be no more pain, and you will rapidly recover your full health and strength.

The finest toys we ever saw are now to be seen at Abright & Shepherd's.

Make money fast and honorably, $12.50 a day, or $75 per week, by at once applying for a territorial right, to one of the best, strongest, most useful and rapid selling Sewing Machine ever used. It is only $5. Sent free by express. Address JAMES H. HUDSON & Co., Cor. Greenwich & Cortlandt Sts., N. Y.

Now comes the season when the little folks are full of joy and bright anticipations. Is it not wrong to disappoint them? Then gather together a few pennies and call at the jewelry store of Abright & Shepherd and buy from the large stock of beautiul toys just received. These have not been kept over from last winter, but are new and different from anything you ever saw.

NEWS SUMMARY.

The East.

THE war steamer Kansas has sailed from New York for Cuban waters, with sealed orders. Others will follow immediately....The suit of G. B. Lamar against Charles A. Dana, to recover $100,000 for illegal imprisonment in 1865, while Dana was Assistant Secretary of War, has been decided at New York in favor of the defendant.

THE Philadelphia carpet-manufacturers are beginning to suffer severely. Two have suspended, and others have been sold out by the Sheriff....A fire in Haverhill, Mass., on the 16th inst., destroyed $175,000 worth of property.

ANOTHER suit has been begun against Jay Cooke & Co, to throw them into bankruptcy, and a temporary injunction has been granted to prevent them from parting with any of their property pending the decision of the suit....The Philadelphia Board of Aldermen have resolved to inaugurate an extensive system of street improvements under authority of the city, to provide work for unemployed men at the rate of 12½ cents per hour....Edward K. Windship, broker, at No. 24 Broad street, New York, has disappeared, owing about 300 creditors above $500,000....Cuban bonds are being freely sold in Philadelphia at 25 cents on the dollar.

THE Union Trust Company, of Pittsburgh, has suspended. The cashier is missing....The widow of the late Secretary Stanton died last week at Philadelphia.

"Boss" TWEED has been found guilty of all the counts in the indictment against him, 204 in number....For the 24 hours ending on the evening of Nov. 19, there were three suicides in Boston, two of which were occasioned by the victims being out of money and employment....Thomas Kinsella, the editor of the Brooklyn Eagle, has been sued by Thomas W. Field, Superintendent of Public Instruction in Brooklyn, for $50,000 damages for debauching his (Field's) wife....The New England fishermen are bewailing the most disastrous season for many years. Twenty-four vessels and 152 lives have been lost....John P. Hale, so long identified with the anti-slavery cause of the country, and so prominently connected with our political history, died, at Dover, N. H., on the 19th inst., aged 68.

The West.

THE Chicago Times of the 14th inst. publishes advices from the principal manufacturing points in Illinois and the contiguous States, from which it appears that the reduction of the business as a whole is less than 20 per cent. In some cases this shrinkage takes the form of running the establishments on less time; in others, in diminishing the number of employes, and in others, in the reduction of wages. It is a very flattering exhibit as compared with the condition of affairs in the Eastern States, and affords a gratifying evidence of the stability of manufacturing interests in the West....Col. Thomas A. Marshall, one of the most prominent men of Illinois, died last week at his home in Centralia....The United States Circuit Court, at Indianapolis, has decided that railroads are answerable for damages sustained by persons riding on free passes, the same as other passengers.

THE great four-mile race at San Francisco, for a purse of $20,000, was won by the California horse Thad. Stevens....The remnant of the Modocs passed through Omaha last week, en route to the Indian Territory....Judge McAllister has resigned his seat on the Illinois Supreme Bench to accept the appointment of Corporation Counsel for the city of Chicago.

FRANK FISK, business agent for the Dayton (O.) Evening Herald, has disappeared for parts unknown with a large amount of the concern's funds.

THERE is much suffering among the homesteaders of Osceola county, Iowa. Twisted hay and seed-grass is the only fuel that nine-tenths of the people have, while their food and clothing are insufficient for the necessaries of life....Arizona is now in telegraphic communication with the rest of the world....The Allen-Hogan prize-fight at Pacific City, Iowa, broke up in a row during the third round, and the referee decided the affair to be a draw....The recent storm on the lakes was very destructive to shipping, and many disasters are reported. The propellers City of Boston, Alaska and Java, and the schooners Orient and Hamilton are among the vessels wrecked. The captain and crew of the latter drifted about in the lake thirty-three hours without food, and were finally washed ashore at South Haven, Mich., the whole party in a senseless condition. Their sufferings are described as terrible....A fire in Buffalo, on the 17th inst., destroyed $200,000 worth of property.

COL. JOHN W. YOUNG, the money-order forger, who is now serving a term in the Illinois Penitentiary at Joliet, corroborates the story published a few days ago, to the effect that the Captain-General of Cuba some time ago made a proposition to him to betray into the hands of the Spanish authorities not less than 100 refugees, all of whom were to be slaughtered, and thus strike terror to the hearts of the revolutionists. Young pretended to give his assent to the diabolical scheme, and was to receive $30,000 for his part of the bloody transaction....Destructive prairie fires are reported in Lancaster and adjoining counties of Nebraska....The merchants of Jacksonville, Ill., are importing potatoes from New York.

The South.

THE New Orleans Times has a dispatch from Colfax, La., announcing the killing by the citizens of seven out of nine negroes who were implicated in the recent Grant parish outrage.

Washington.

IT is intimated that Secretary Richardson will recommend, in his forthcoming report, that the $44,000,000 reserve be legalized and brought into active service, and that, to obviate the inadequacy of the revenue to meet the necessities of the Government, the duty on coffee and tea be restored....A. C. Beston, a partner in the well-known banking-house of Riggs & Co., committed suicide a few days ago....The Spanish outrage is the all-absorbing topic in official and private circles at the National Capital. The Government is manifesting a determination to be prepared for whatever comes out of the affair. Sounds of war are heard in our hitherto quiet navy yards, and busy preparations are going forward to get vessels of war ready for sea. The Secretary of War has issued orders to immediately put in repair the Florida forts.

INTERNAL revenue receipts for the first half of November, $3,670,962....Postmaster-General Creswell has finished his report to the next Congress. It is understood that he strongly urges the schemes for postal savings banks and a postal telegraph....Secretary Belknap is reported to have said, in reference to the secret deliberations of the Cabinet meeting concerning the Virginius case, that the amplest measures had been decided upon to obtain satisfaction for that outrage. The American people, he said, must be hard to please if they would not be satisfied with them. Seven hundred men were at work all day Sunday in the Philadelphia Navy Yard, and almost equal activity is manifest in the other yards....Washington correspondents are pretty generally agreed that Conkling is the coming Chief Justice.

THE charge for registering domestic letters is to be reduced. Hitherto it has been fifteen cents; but, after Jan. 1, eight cents only will be charged....President Grant has made public an informal expression of his views on the Virginius case. He and his advisers feel as indignant as any at the conduct of the Spaniards, and are determined to protect American citizens, and to compel respect for the American flag, but they are still unwilling to act except upon full and trustworthy information which has yet to come. The Virginius, the President said, if properly cleared, had a right to enter any port in the Spanish possessions, and Spain had no right to interfere in any way with our merchant ships upon the high seas....Potatoes are now worth more per bushel than wheat. Congress will be petitioned to suspend the duty of fifteen cents per bushel on the important tubers, so as to let them in from Canada, Nova Scotia and the Bermuda Islands.

THE War and Navy Secretaries are receiving telegrams and letters by the score from volunteer officers in the late war tendering their services in case of hostilities. Many of the ex-Confederates have also written that they would like to have a chance to serve the Government if difficulty should arise....A Washington dispatch says the Secretary of State has received unofficial information from Madrid of the determination of the Spanish Government to concede, in the most prompt and liberal manner consistent with an official acquaintance with the facts, the extremest demands of the United States. Secretary Fish, it is added, feels confident there will be no war.

INTERNAL revenue receipts for the year, $114,000,000....A Washington dispatch says: Secretary Fish has persistently alleged that the Government will not be prevaricated with by any policy of procrastination which the Spanish, after their style of diplomacy, may seek to adopt....Assurances have been received from the Spanish Government that all reasonable demands from the United States Government will be complied with.

Foreign.

THE latest advices from France are not favorable to the millennial condition of things which was promised by the dispatches of several days past. The statement has been made that the two parties had effected an agreement the basis of which was that MacMahon's term should be prolonged for five years, but that he should accept the designation of President of the Republic. It now appears, however, that the Right will not consent to this arrangement, but will insist upon the unconditional prolongation of MacMahon's term for ten years....The report that the Tichborne case had been adjourned for a year was false. The trial is again in progress....Many of the inhabitants of Greenland are starving to death. The famine is produced by a failure of the potato crop.

SPANISH credit is at a lower ebb in London than ever before....The London press express the opinion that the recent Spanish outrage has virtually settled the fate of the island of Cuba....Victor Emanuel, in his opening address to the Italian Parliament, on the 5th inst., declared that the experiment of making Rome the capital was a complete success; and that while the Italian people respected the religious sentiments of the Pope, he will not be permitted to meddle with secular matters....The committee of the French Assembly on the prolongation of MacMahon's term made their final report on the 15th inst., in which they recommend that he be granted only five years' power, and that a Committee of Thirty be appointed to consider constitutional bills. There was much excitement over the conclusions of the committee....The revolution in Paraguay has been suppressed.

PRESIDENT MACMAHON sent a message to the French Assembly on the 17th inst., asking that his term be prolonged for seven years, but insisting that this action should not be postponed until after the consideration of the constitutional bills. The committee assented to the first part of the recommendation, but dissented from the last...The British and the Ashantes have had a severe battle, in which the latter were defeated....Great Britain, it is announced, will hold Spain to a strict accountability if another British subject is murdered.

THE Spanish Cabinet, according to a Madrid telegram, are unanimously in favor of a satisfactory and honorable settlement of the Virginius difficulty, but regard the maintenance of the integrity of the Spanish territory essential....The rumored sinking of the Virginius had no foundation....A Havana telegram says: Of the members of the crew of the Virginius not shot at Santiago de Cuba, four were condemned to the chain-gang for life, three to eight years' imprisonment, eight to four years' imprisonment, and three were set at liberty.

THE capture of the Virginius and the slaughter of her passengers was celebrated in Havana by a grand bull-fight...Havana advices to the 10th inst. state that many persons on the island hitherto unsuspected of complicity with the insurgents were being arrested and shot without mercy. All American vessels arriving in port are immediately boarded, and the passengers seized and searched. Six of the passengers of the steamer New York, three of them women, were arrested and taken ashore, and, it is rumored, were shot without trial. It is reported that seventeen prisoners have been shot at Holquin, Cuba, for alleged conspiracy....In the French Assembly on the 19th inst., M. Rouher's proposition to submit the question of the prolongation of MacMahon's term to a vote of the people was defeated by a large vote, and the motion to extend his power seven years adopted by a majority of 66....News has reached New York of a most diabolical outrage perpetrated by the Spanish fiends at Santiago. When tidings of the capture of the Virginius reached there the Spanish volunteers, in their fiendish exultation over their triumph, visited the widows of the Masons who were shot in 1868, and brutally outraged the helpless women, and in the struggle (it is stated) four of the women were killed, seven have since died, and several were in such a dangerous condition that they cannot possibly recover....The Spanish Minister of War has ordered all members of the reserve of the army to report in person at the depots of their respective corps within a fortnight.

Political.

THE Minnesota Legislature stands as follows: Senate—Republican, 27; Opposition, 14. House—Republican, 60; Opposition, 45. Republican majority on joint ballot, 28.

General.

THE atrocious butcheries perpetrated by the Spaniards in Cuba have caused intense excitement all over the country, and public meetings are being held in many of the large cities to express indignation at the outrage. The desire for prompt and decisive measures on the part of our Government is universal.

QUITE a stir has been produced in religious circles by the withdrawal of Bishop Cummins, of Kentucky, from the Episcopal Church.

THE mails by the steamer Frankfort, which arrived at Havana from New Orleans on the 15th inst., were seized by the Spanish authorities....The work of fitting out vessels for sea is going forward at all the navy yards with all possible haste....Duncan T. Templeton shot and dangerously wounded his wife in the streets of New York, a few evenings ago. Mrs. Templeton is a daughter of Gen. Babcock, of President Grant's staff....The excitement throughout the country over the massacre of the Virginius passengers is unabated....Advices from Havana fully confirm the previously reported slaughter of the third and final detachment of the Virginius' prisoners at Santiago de Cuba. Thus, every soul on board that unfortunate vessel has perished miserably at the hands of the inhuman butchers of Spain.

THE excitement over the Virginius affair continues. Everywhere the popular sentiment is warlike to a degree that has not often been witnessed in this country. In many places this takes the form of offers of troops, and it is scarcely extravagant to say that these are sufficient already to constitute an army that could march from one end of Cuba to the other.

ACTIVITY continues at all the navy yards of the United States. The monitors and other war vessels are being made ready for active service with all possible dispatch. The Juniata, a screw gunboat of eight guns, and the war steamer Worcester have left for Cuban waters. Fifteen or eighteen more men-of-war are nearly ready for Cuban service. Secretary Robeson has expressed his determination to remove all obstructions, and place the navy on a secure footing, ready at all times for peace or war. He has ordered recruiting offices to be opened throughout the country, and the navy will be recruited to the utmost capacity allowed by law.

SPANISH BUTCHERIES.

The Remainder of the Virginius' Passengers Slaughtered—One Hundred and Eleven Americans and Cubans Shot to Death.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 14.—Information has just been received here that the balance of the crew of the Virginius have been shot, making 111 in all.

HAVANA, Nov. 14.—The trials of all prisoners taken on board the Virginius has been concluded. Only eighteen will be saved from death. Of these, several are engineers or firemen, who were ignorant of the destination of the expedition, and four or five will be set at liberty. The others will probably be condemned to the chain gang.

HAVANA, Nov. 14.—Evening.—The Diario, of Cienfuegas, says fifty-seven of the Virginius captives were shot at Santiago on the 10th inst. No particulars of these additional executions have yet been made public here.

NEW YORK, Nov. 14.—A dispatch, via Jamaica, says on the 10th all the remaining Virginius captives were marched out, and ten detailed to execution at at time. When these ten were murdered, another ten were marched up, and their dead bodies fell across those of their companions.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 14.—The Administration is thoroughly in accord with the sentiment of the people in regard to the Spanish murders, and the course of the authorities will be heartily approved. At a Cabinet meeting to-day, it was determined to demand of Spain the immediate arrest and punishment of the parties mainly instrumental in conducting the outrage of which the Government so seriously complains, and, if the Castelar Government shall be unable to give the required satisfaction, this Government will proceed to the extreme measures necessary to obtain it. There is unusual activity in all the navy yards. The war steamer Kansas has already sailed, with sealed orders, for Cuban waters. Rear-Admiral Scott sails on Wednesday.

LONDON, Nov. 14.—The shooting of the crew and passengers of the steamship Virginius is commented on at length by the London morning journals, all of which express a hope that the executions will be avenged by the Government of the United States.

THANKSGIVING.

Annual Proclamation of the President.

By the President of the United States of America:

A PROCLAMATION.

The approaching close of another year brings with it the occasion for renewed thanksgiving and acknowledgment to the Almighty Ruler of the Universe for the unnumbered mercies which he has bestowed upon us. Abundant harvests have been among the rewards of industry. With local exceptions, health has been among the blessings enjoyed. Tranquillity at home and peace with other nations have prevailed. Frugal industry is regaining its merited recognition, and its merited rewards. Gradually, but under the providence of God, surely as we trust, the nation is recovering from the lingering results of a dreadful civil strife. For these and all the other mercies vouchsafed, it becomes us as a people to return heartfelt and grateful acknowledgements, and with our thanksgiving we may unite prayers for the cessation of local and temporary suffering. I therefore recommend that on Thursday, the 27th day of November next, the people meet in their respective places of worship to make their acknowledgements to Almighty God for his bounties and his protection, and to offer to him prayers for their continuence.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington this 4th day of October, in the year of our Lord 1873, and of the independence of the United States the ninety-seventh.

(Signed) ULYSSES S. GRANT.

HAMILTON FISH, Secretary of State.

The Atlantic Cables.

The attempt of the Great Eastern steamer to lift and repair the Atlantic ocean cable of 1868 has failed, owing to stormy weather, and the great ship has returned to England. The work is postponed to next year. The fault has been located at a point not far eastward of the banks of Newfoundland. The cable was successfully grappled and lifted several times. A portion of the original cable, that of 1858, was brought up during the grappling operation and found to be in a fair state of preservation.

It was thought quite wonderful, when the second cable broke, a few years ago, that the Great Eastern could sail to the very spot in the pathless waters and pick up the broken rope. Now the successful grappling with a cable laid five years ago is taken as a matter of course.

THE PEOPLE'S ARMY.

BY MRS. E. R. SMITH.

Not with trumpet's peal or glitter of steel,
  With no sound of the martial drum,
From the prairies wide and the green hillside
  To-day to our legions come;
Yet many a hard-won field attests
  The strength of the sturdy arms
That, in battling toil with the stubborn soil,
  Have wrested these smiling farms.

Earth's rudest waste we have still replaced
  With the wealth of the waving grain;
And life's best years, with its hopes and fears,
  Have been spent in the strife in vain;
For what avails when our labor fails
  To gather its just rewards,
And the fields we plow and plant and sow
  Are reaped by our railway lords?

Like the spiritless slave, we toil and save
  To give to their grasping hands
The fairest yield of our flock and field—
  Aye, give, in the end, our lands!
O son of the soil, bronzed soldier of toil,
  For this did you brave the past—
In the blood-bought home, when peace had come,
  That the stranger might dwell at the last?

Lo! hand in hand, over all the land
  Again do our armies grow;
And the arm that could smite for the slave's birth-right
  May yet deal for its own a blow.
Thrice armed they come, without beat of drum,
  Or herald of warlike notes,
And the tongue and pen of unbought men,
  And freemen's unbought votes.

And in the shout that to-day rings out
  From a million voices clear,
Let our would-be kings and corruption rings
  Fate's voice in the people's hear.
Like chaff from the flail in the hurrying gale,
  As stubble before the fire,
They shall vanish away in the coming day
  Of an outraged people's ire.

THE FARMERS' MOVEMENT.

Sentiments of the Press.

THE Farmers' Granges exhibit in the recent elections a power at the polls which was unexpected, and in several of the Western States they are already the controlling element. Wise counsels and deliberate action will make them a power for good in the purification of politics, the putting down of corrupt rings, and the restraint of monopolies.—Sandusky (Ohio) Register.

WE are compelled to congratulate the Anti-Monopolists of Illinois on their triumph. Considering that it is their first fight, and that they went into the battle with clumsy weapons and not half drilled, their victory is remarkable, and almost without precedent. They have shown what they could do under favorable auspices. Next year Illinois will have a Legislature to elect, and its complexion is already foreshadowed.—Minneapolis Tribune.

THE farmers have thrown the Administration party into confusion and dismay in Iowa, totally revolutionized politics in Wisconsin, torn apart the close fibers of partisanship from one end of Illinois to the other, and carried Kansas outright, besides greatly reducing the Republican majorities in the Minnesota Legislature and electing their own candidate for State Treasurer. Their triumph is too sweeping to be underrated by the journals of the vanquished party.—Boston Post.

THIS great change comes mainly from the electors in the rural districts. It is the people outside of the cities who have spoken. They have had enough of the sham party—the party that makes pledges but to be broken, and betrays the people when in power. The change comes from honest convictions. It has not been brought about by excitements usual to election campaigns. The people of the country have made up their judgment deliberately, and the verdict is full of meaning.—Grand Rapids (Mich.) Democrat.

THESE elections in the West, and the appearance of this new element in politics, will, of course, be carefully studied by politicians, and, we presume, will form the basis of action by Congress this winter to meet, if possible, the grievances of the agriculturists. It is true only local issues were involved, but the farmers, with the acuteness of old politicians, argued that if they could carry the county elections this fall, and thus oust the court-house politicians of the old parties, their work next year, in the more important elections for Congressmen and Legislature, would be so much the lighter. This is good logic, and seems to have been acted on with remarkable success.—Pittsburgh (Pa.) Telegraph.

The Farmers' Movement in the Far East.

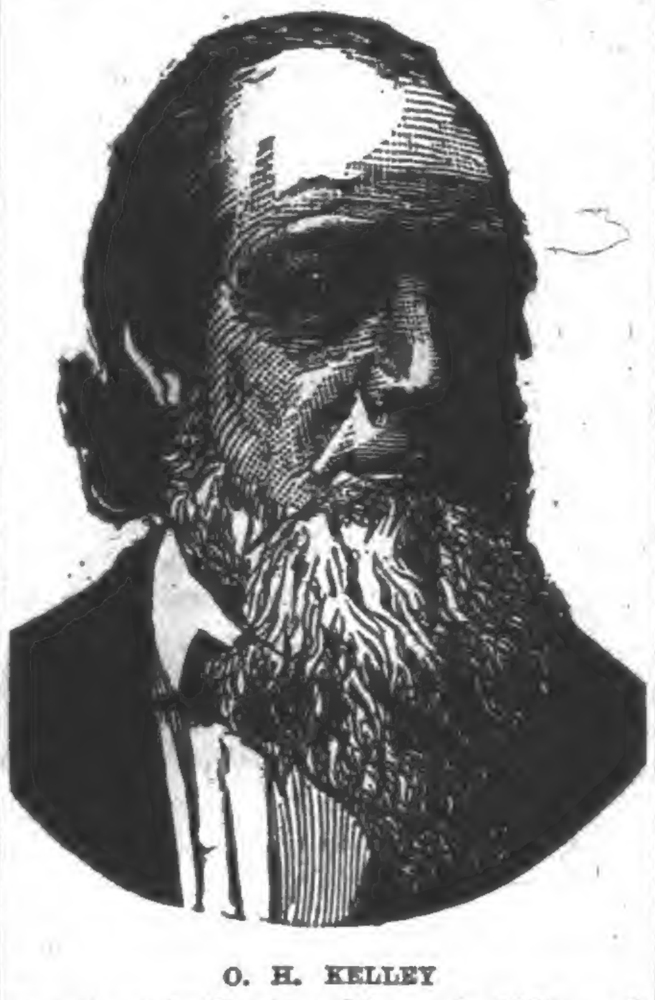
A Boston dispatch of Nov. 14 says: A new State Grange of the Patrons of Husbandry is to be formed in Greenfield, in Western Massachusetts, the home of Gov. Washburn, in December. There are now over a dozen in the State, a large number in Vermont, several in New Hampshire, but only one thus far in Maine. The last one formed in Massachusetts was in Danvers, one of the large shoe-towns, and where there are few farmers. It is named the Putnam Grange, after the illustrious Gen. Israel Putnam. The first funeral of a Granger in which the Order conducted the ceremonies took place in Vermont, in the town of Deerfield, on Monday.

PATRONS OF HUSBANDRY.

Portraits of Some of the Prominent Persons Connected with the Order.

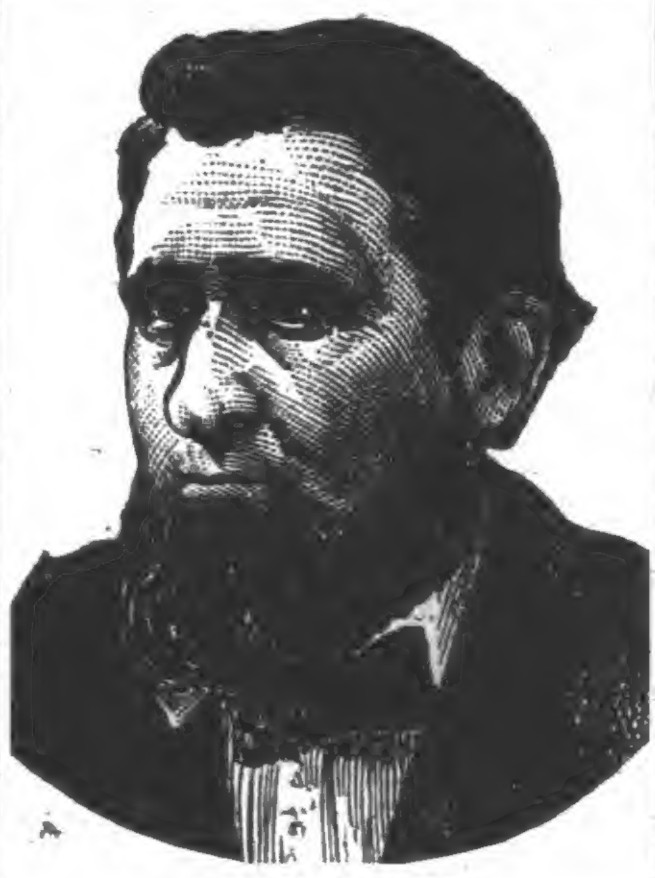
The rapid increase of the order of Patrons of Husbandry, and its intimate connection with the farmers' movement, gives to this organization a peculiar interest, and excites a curiosity to know its origin, and the prominent persons connected with it. We are able to present our readers with portraits of some of them, and this week give those of Messrs. O. H. Kelley, William Saunders, and D. W. Adams, to be followed by others.

The pioneers and originators of the movement were O. H. Kelly, of the Agricultural Bureau, at Washington, and William Saunders, Superintendent of the Gardens and Ground of the same department.



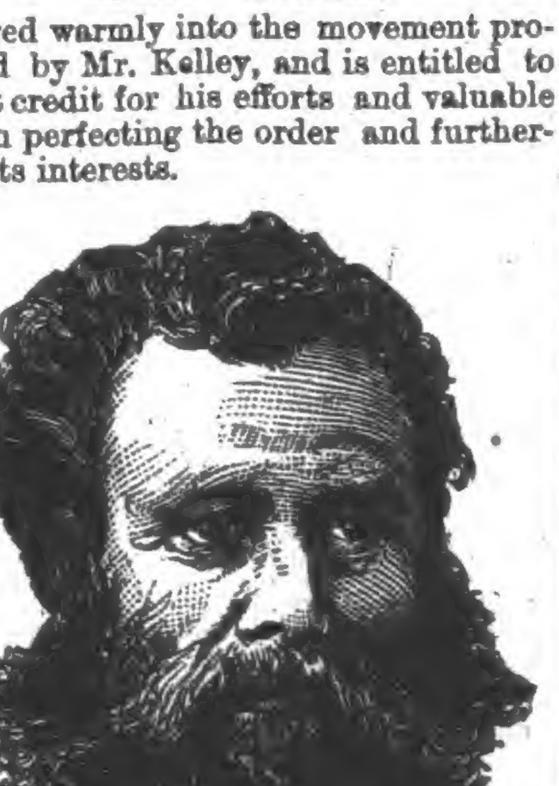
O. H. KELLEY

was born in Boston, Mass., in 1827, and is now forty-seven years old. In 1866 he traveled through the South under a commission from President Johnson, to look into and report upon the labor system there, which was then in an unsettled and unsatisfactory condition. Among the results growing out of this duty, was his suggestion of a plan by which the farmers of all sections of the country could unite for social and educational purposes. Out of consultations and discussions with a number of gentlemen connected with the various departments in Washington, grew the Patrons of Husbandry. On the 4th of December, 1867, the National Grange was instituted at Washington. In April following, Mr. Kelley, under the direction of the National Grange, left Washington to establish subordinate Granges in various States. He has seen his labors rewarded by the establishment of thousands of Granges throughout the country, consisting of a great auxiliary, if not the moving spirit, in the struggle of the agricultural interests against the abuses which have weighed them down.



WILLIAM SAUNDERS

entered warmly into the movement proposed by Mr. Kelley, and is entitled to great credit for his efforts and valuable aid in perfecting the order and furthering its interests.



DUDLEY W. ADAMS,

Master of the National Grange, has long been identified with the rural industries of Iowa, chiefly devoting himself to horticulture. He is about forty years of age, and has a fine physique. He is warmly devoted to the interests of the order, believing that it is a potent agency in accomplishing the reforms which are demanded by the farming interests.

AN Anti-Chinese Convention was held at San Francisco a few days ago, and a committee was formed to draft an address to the people of the United States on the subject of Chinese immigration. When hundreds of thousands of mechanics are out of employment throughout the country, the best of reasons exist why we should endeavor to put a stop to the further arrival of heathens who are ready to work for what no civilized man can live on, and who promise to be of no benefit to us in any shape or manner.

Labor and Trade.

THERE are 18,000 unemployed working people in Troy, N. Y., and vicinity.

THE wages of the printers in Jackson, Mich., have been reduced ten per cent., and the Typographical Union has disbanded.

THE strike of employes on the East Tennessee, Georgia and Virginia railroad is ended, and trains are running regularly.

MEASURES are being taken by the Camden (N. J.) citizens to form aid societies, etc. It is believed that there will be great suffering among the poor this winter in that district.

A QUEBEC paper states that the settlers on the Island of Anticosti are represented in a starving condition, and the Canadian Government has dispatched a steamer with provisions.

THE steamship Atlas, which sailed from Boston on the 11th inst., for Liverpool, had 260 steerage passengers, a large proportion of them mill operatives and artisans who are returning to the Old World for lack of employment in this country. Some forty factory operatives from Fall River embarked in the Atlas.

A BOSTON dispatch of Nov. 11 says: Reports from the manufacturing sections of New England are more cheering this morning. There is news of the resumption of business in several places, and the running of manufactories on increased time. The exaggerated character of the many statements that have appeared is daily becoming more apparent.

ONE of the effects of the stringent times in New York city is a large falling off from the usual street car receipts. The falling off is from $200 to $500 a day in each company. The street cars are used very largely by working people in going to and returning from their daily toil. Thousands are now thrown out of employment and have no occasion to use the street cars, while a multitude who must go from place to place seeking employment, cannot afford to ride.

Suspension of the California and Texas Construction Company.

The above company, the failure of which has been announced, was organized for the purpose of constructing the Texas and Pacific railroad, from Shreveport, La., to San Diego, Cal. The road is already completed to near Fort Worth, a distance of 300 miles. The company's heavy lines of discounts, made to prosecute the work on the road, in anticipation of the negotiation of a loan in Europe, proved too heavy for even a combination of the strongest financial men in the country to carry through the present unexampled stringency of the money market. The notes of the construction company are indorsed by Col. Thomas A. Scott, Mathew Baird, John McNamara, and other capitalists, to the amount of about $4,500,000, all of which will mature within a few days. In addition, the construction company has $600,000 of unsecured obligations in the shape of drafts, and $1,600,000 of loans on collaterals and individual security, and $250,000 of floating debt, making an aggregate of $7,000,000 in liabilities. The amount thus raised, and $4,000,000 paid in cash by the stockholders of the construction company, makes altogether $11,000,000 that has been expended on the construction of the Texas and Pacific railroad. For this amount of money the construction company has to show 300 miles of completed, equipped, and operated railroad, from Shreveport to Dallas, from Marshall to Texana, and from Sherman toward Paris, and 140 miles in addition are graded, bridged, and supplied with ties ready for the iron.

The fact that the company suspended payment, and that Col. Thomas A. Scott is the indorser of several millions of the notes, as well as the President of the Texas and Pacific, gave rise to the rumors about the failure of Col. Scott. As yet Col. Scott has not failed, but whether he will be able to weather the storm is a matter of great doubt among our leading railway men. Should he go under, then there is no doubt that every railroad company in the country will suffer more or less, and for this reason a panicky feeling exists among railway magnates everywhere.

A Curious Fire in Pittsburgh.

A Pittsburgh dispatch says: Last June a fire occurred on the banks of the Allegheny river which destroyed several sheds of small value; and the fire at the time, it was thought, was extinguished. This seems to have been a mistake. The ground upon which these sheds stood is made mostly of cinder, screenings of coal and slag. This combustible stuff has held the fire to the present time, and it has now become, for several blocks along the river-front, a burning mass, sending flames into the air, sometimes to the height of 15 or 20 feet. The fire department has been appealed to, and is now working on this burning material. Immense trenches have been dug, and are digging around the place, which it is intended shall be filled with water. It is expected that by this means and the constant working for a couple of weeks of two engines, the underground fire may be extinguished. Of course, this fire just now is a center of attraction, and is creating a decided sensation. Fear is expressed lest all the made ground along the river-front may share a like fate.

Jewish Population of France.

According to the Jewish statistics, as given by their authorities, there were, in 1870, 108,436 Jews residing in France, including Algeria, Oran, and Constantine.

The Jewish population is thus divided in several districts, or, as they call it, conscriptions: For the district of Paris, 22,000; Metz, 8,500; Nancy, 8,800, and in Nancy itself, 1,500. For the district of Strasburg, 20,936; Colmar, 17,000; and at Colmar, 1,250; at Mulhouse, 2,000. For the district of Lyons, 2,200; Marseilles, 3,300; Bordeaux, 4,000; Bayonne, 2,200; Algiers, 7,000; Oran, 6,000; Constantine, 4,500.

A CHINAMAN came down one of the main streets of Millerton, Cal., on election day, in a state of inebriation and of joyful exaltation, and thus delivered himself: "Hoop la! me all same Melican man. Hair cut short and drunk like h—l. Hoop la!"

Life Insurance and Moderate Drinking.

One of the mutual life insurance organizations of the world is "The United Kingdom Temperance and General Provident Institution," of London, England, of which Mr. William Tweedie, the eminent temperance publisher, and other leading temperance men of England are the directors. The company is thirty-two years in existence—a long experience—the experience of a whole generation.

The system of the company is now to insure all classes of the community who are sound in health and addicted to no bad habits or pursuits. At first it only insured absolute teetotalers. It now insures very moderate drinkers as well. But it still keeps the two classes separate in different ledgers. All pay the same premiums for the insurance, but the dividends are divided according to the results in each ledger account—teetotalers distinct from moderate drinkers.

This is the very best test, we take leave to say, and can be applied, as to the effects of even the moderate use of alcohol liquors, on health and longevity.

Here are healthy men introduced by the same agents, examined by the same doctors, the applications for insurance carefully scrutinized by the same board of teetotalers as directors, and what is the experience of the company?

The Actuary of the Temperance Provident is Mr. Samuel Bener, of world-wide fame in his profession. He is not, himself, a teetotaler, but he is a mathematician, and figures don't err. He has just reported to the directors the results of their last year's business.

According to the Carlisle tables of mortality, there ought to have been 137 deaths among the lives of the teetotalers insured in the books of the company. There were only 90 deaths—47 less in 137 than the tables calculated for. The amount which ought to have been payable to the widows and orphans of the deceased teetotalers was $130,290, in gold. The actual amount payable was only $65,025. The saving in the temperance section, from low mortality, was, therefore, no less than $65,265 out of $130,290. The mortality claims among the teetotalers did not fully come to 50 per cent. of the amount calculated upon.

On the same laws of calculations, by the Carlisle tables of mortality, the death-rate among the moderate drinkers ought to have been just 244 persons. The actual mortality was 282 individuals, being 38 in excess of the tables.

This is an enormous percentage beyond the death-rate of the teetotalers. The amount of claims ought to have been $244,415, gold. The actual claims for the moderate drinkers came to $252,875, being $8,640 in excess of the sum calculated for in the tables. This shows a fearful per centage in excess of the claims in the temperance section.

The result of this is that the teetotalers insured in the United Kingdom Temperance receive from 30 to 50 per cent. higher dividends than the moderate drinkers insured in the same institution on the same terms. We, personally, receive those dividends, being for several years now insured in the United Kingdom Temperance and General Provident Institution, and, therefore, write of what is within our own knowledge.—Phrenological Journal.

Steel and Glass Billiard Balls.

A billiard player, who is dissatisfied with ivory balls, makes in an English paper a suggestion which may be worth the attention of inventors. He says:

Everyone who plays at billards knows that occasionally the balls do not run true. They are made of ivory, and even when they are quite new the ivory is not of equal density throughout; and when they are old the external portion is much more dry than the internal, consequently the difference of density is greater, and the balls, especially when going gently, swerve from a direct course, the specific gravity of the different parts of the mass being different. It has often occurred to me that much better and truer balls might be made either of glass or steel. The weight might be made the same as those of ivory by having a hollow in the middle of the ball. It is well known that a hollow sphere runs more truly and more evenly than a solid one. The specific gravity of ivory is to that of glass about as 3 to 4, to that of steel as 3 to 13. The hollow in a steel ball would thus be greater than in a glass one, and it would therefore be the truest, and the elasticity in either case would be greater than ivory. It appears to me, therefore, that either steel or glass would be superior to ivory for the purpose, and I wonder whether it has ever occurred to any one to try these materials. I do not think that glass of the toughest kind would be more liable to chip than ivory, and steel would be much less so. There is another point to be considered—the expense, and this I am convinced would be much less in either case. The experiment is worth trying, as elephants are getting scarce, and may be applied to better purposes than making billiard balls.

The Career of MacMahon.

Without disrespect to the gallant soldier who now rules France, it may be said that to the redoubtable history of Athos, Porthos, and Aramis alone might one turn for a precise parallel to many of his exploits and achievements. Here is a private who has carried his baton in his knapsack. Here is an adventurer who at the sword's point has won his way up the perilous acclivity of promotion—not unlike the grand plateau above Chamouni, in traversing which the climbers of Mont Blanc are liable at any moment to be swept from creation by the stormbolt of an avalanche. Here is a younger son who, sent into the world to seek his fortune, has advanced step by step to the very summit of his ambition. Entering the military service of France in 1825, when barely 17, he became in 1833 Captain, in 1840 Major, in 1845 Colonel, in 1848 General of Brigade, in 1852 General of Division. In 1859 he obtained on one day the coronet of a Duke and the baton of a Marshal. In 1865 he assumed proconsular power as Governor-General of Algeria. In 1872 he grasped the supreme bauble of dominion almost reluctantly, when an overwhelming majority of the Assembly thrust upon his acceptance the Presidency of the French Republic.—Pall Mall Gazette.

A Racy Examination.

The following racy examination of candidates for the admission to the bar is taken from the Western Law Journal. The examination commenced with:

"Do you smoke?"

"I do, sir."

"Have you a spare cigar?"

"I have, sir." (Extends a short six.)

"Now, sir, what is the first duty of a lawyer?"

"Collect fees, sir."

"Right. What is the second?"

"To increase the number of clients."

"When does the position toward clients change?"

"When making out a bill of costs."

"Explain."

"We then occupy the antagonistic position. I become the plaintiff and he becomes the defendant."

"Suit decided, how do you stand with the lawyer on the other side?"

"Cheek by jowl."

"Enough, sir. You promise to be an ornament to your profession, and I wish you success. Now, are you aware of the duty you owe me?"

"Perfectly."

"Describe it."

"It is to invite you to drink."

"But suppose I decline?"

Candidate scratches his head.

"There is no instance of the kind on record in the books. I cannot answer the question."

"You are right. And the confidence with which you make the assertion shows conclusively that you read the law attentively. Let's take a drink, and I will sign your certificate at once."

The Murdered Cubans.

The persons captured on the steamer Virginius and executed by the Spanish authorities were: 1. Gen. Verona, a native Cuban, who was a General in the insurgent forces. He has been in New York, and a short time ago went to Jamaica, where he took passage on the Virginius. 2. Cespedes, brother to the Cuban President, and an active participant in the rebellion. Infirm health compelled him to live in Jamaica, where he had a plantation, and he was on his way back to Cuba when captured. 3. Col. Del Sol, also a native Cuban and an active rebel. Some eighteen months ago, he was taken prisoner and sent to Spain, whence he escaped and came to the United States. He was on his way to Cuba when captured. The immediate families of all these men are now in New York.

The fourth person executed at Santiago de Cuba was Gen. W. O'C. Ryan. He was an American citizen, 32 years of age, and a man of some literary ability. He joined the Cubans at the beginning, and organized a cavalry corps, proving himself an efficient officer. He had been in New York for some time, an accredited agent of the Cuban Government. He accompanied two expeditions to Cuba, and was once arrested. His case is the only one in which this country has a direct interest. That he had been in the Cuban army and in arms against Spain is not denied, and, had he been captured in the field, he would have been compelled to take the consequences. But the right to execute him or to hold him prisoner depends on the right of Spain to capture the Virginius on the high seas. If that capture was illegal, then the seizure of the vessel and of those on board was equally illegal; and if the American flag legally protected the ship, it equally protected those on board.

Incombustible Paper.

An English inventor has secured letters patent for incombustible paper and ink. Though the paper is not claimed to be absolutely proof against heat of any degree of fierceness, yet it is held that, under such circumstances as fires in dwellings, stores and factories, it is "ordinarily incombustible." The pulp is manufactured of vegetable fiber, one part; asbestos, two parts; borax, one-tenth part; alum, two-tenths parts. Not only is writing paper thus made, but a stout paper is manufactured for binding books and for inclosing manuscripts. The fire-proof ink can be used either in writing or printing, and is made according to the following receipt: Graphite, finely ground, twenty-two drachms; copal or other resinous gum, twelve grains; sulphate of iron, two drachms; tincture of nut-galls, two drachms, and sulphate of indigo, eight drachms. These substances are thoroughly mixed and boiled in water, and the ink thus obtained is said to be both fire-proof and insoluble in water. When any other color but black is desired, the graphite is replaced by an earthly mineral pigment of the desired color.

Value of Rentals in Great Britain

The estimated value of rentals in Great Britain and Ireland for 1872, as rated for local and municipal taxation, was as follows:

England, city and country..........	£102,334,254
Ireland, city and country..........	13,239,190
Scotland, city and country..........	38,062,981

Multiply these sums by five, and you have the rental value in dollars. Thus England, in round numbers, is $510,000,000; Ireland, $66,000,000; and Scotland, $190,000,000; whereas the actual rent paid to landlords is fully one-third more than those sums,—the rental of Ireland being $100,000,000. The poverty of Ireland, as compared with the wealth of Scotland, which has but half the population, cannot escape the notice of the reader.

Hardening Small Tools.—According to J. Scheuzleder, watchmakers and engravers harden their tools in sealing-wax. The article is made white-hot and thrust into sealing-wax, allowed to remain a moment, then withdrawn and thrust into another place, and this treatment is continued until the steel is cold, and will no more enter the wax. The hardness thus attained is extreme, and comparable to that of the diamond; in fact, steel hardened this way may be used for boring or engraving steel hardened by other processes, the tool being previously moistened with oil of turpentine.

Absolute pure iron is said to have been produced by a Russian chemist by means of the galvanic battery. During the process a large quantity of hydrogen was disengaged from the ordinary iron used. A Sample of Hard Times.

The Lawrence (Mass.) American tells of a sad case of destitution which has come within its observation in that city. A very poor but honest appearing and prepossessing young man, named Robert Steel, on his own request, was sentenced to four months in the House of Correction, in order that he might work for the shelter it would afford him during the winter. He had been discharged from one of the mills early in the summer, during a reduction of labor, and having been deserted by his father, and having no mother, he had during the intervening months been dependent upon the charity of strangers. Without a bed on which to rest, he had been compelled to seek shelter at night in barns and other empty buildings, until the increasing coldness of the weather no longer rendered it possible for him to resort to them. As a last alternative, he gave himself into the custody of the City Marshal, requesting that he might be sent to prison, where he might work for the shelter it might afford him during the winter. He was brought into court and sentenced as we have stated above. In committing him, the Judge lamented the circumstances necessitating such a course, and said that if at any time any charitable person offered the young man (who is only 17) employment, he would be given an order for his release.

Hot Work.

In relation to the subject of how high a temperature men can endure and work in, a writer in the British Journal of Science notes the following interesting cases: "During the reheating of furnaces in an iron-works in England, the men worked when the thermometer, placed so as not to be influenced by the radiation of heat from the open doors, marked 120 deg. In the Bessemer pits 140 deg. was reached, and yet the men continued a kind of labor requiring great muscular effort. In some of the operations of glass making, the ordinary summer working of temperature is considerably over 100 deg. and the radiant heat to which workmen are subjected far exceeds 212 deg. In a Turkish bath the shampooers continue four or five hours at a time in a moist atmosphere at temperatures ranging from 105 deg. to 110 deg. A case is mentioned of a person in the same establishment working for half an hour in a heat of 185 deg. In enamel factories men work daily in a heat of over 300 deg. On the Red sea steamers the temperature of the stoke hole is 145 deg. and some men will labor there for half an hour without a drop of perspiration, while others are carried out fainting. These examples of continuous work at 110 deg., 120 deg., 140 deg. and 145 deg., correspond to depths in mines of 3,650, 4,250 and 5,750 feet. The author thinks, therefore, that the limit of 4,000 feet, fixed by the English Commissioners as the extreme workable depth of mines, is too small, and he considers 8,000 feet a safe boundary."

The Sprague Family.

The failure of the Spragues is the first great pecuniary disaster which has befallen the family. For at least three generations—including the present one—they had been going on prosperously and increasing in wealth.

The house at present is composed of Amasa and William Sprague. They are brothers, and sons of the late Amasa Sprague, a rich and influential man, and we think at the time of his death a State Senator in Rhode Island. Amasa Sprague, Sr., was murdered many years ago, one bright Sunday afternoon, within sight of several houses, and evidently, from the appearances about the place where the body was found, after a most determined and desperate struggle.

A man was subsequently hanged for the murder; but the evidence against him, though strong enough to lead to a conviction, was entirely circumstantial, and he protested his innocence to the last, although we believe he stated or intimated that he knew who the guilty person was. William Sprague, in one of his speeches in the United States Senate, referred with much feeling to the tragic death of his father as an event which had cast an immovable sorrow over the early years of his life.

The former United States Senator from Rhode Island, bearing the same name, was the uncle of the present Senator.

The difficulties which have overborne the Spragues, at least temporarily, are believed to have been greatly augmented by a bitter personal hatred toward Wm. Sprague, cherished by what is known as the Brown and Ives party, and growing mainly out of Mr. Sprague's course in the United States Senate.—New York Sun.

The Colors of Candy.

The colors of candy often excite remark. Some are supposed to be poisonous, and on this subject the Manufacturer and Builder remarks: "Litmus, indigo and aniline blue are harmless blue colors; white chlorophyl, or the green coloring matter of leaves, is harmless; green aniline green might also so be used. The idea that aniline colors are poisonous is erroneous. It is true that the aniline oil itself (a colorless fluid from which the aniline colors are made) is a poison; but the antadote is to add something to change it into an aniline color, when it becomes comparatively harmless. The aniline colors are also so very powerful a coloring material that only a very minute quantity is needed to color very large amounts of candy, so that, even if somewhat poisonous or injurious, it would be necessary to consume several hundred pounds of candy at once in order to produce any poisonous effect of the coloring matter." This will interest young children and school girls, who would gladly run the risk of danger could they banquet on such a liberal scale. Another good authority, however, maintains that all aniline dyes are at least suspicious, and therefore unfitted for all culinary purposes.

Remedy for a Dog Bite.

In the case of the bite of a dog where the teeth penetrated the flesh, whether the dog was known to be mad or not, use the same precautions. Wash the wound with warm water, extract all the virus possible by sucking the wound with the lips and then cauterize it deeply with the caustic most readily obtained. The time in which the effects of the bite of a mad dog would be seen, varies from two to three days to as many years; but if no effects are felt after two or three months, as a general thing, the patient may consider himself safe. Bites made through clothing are seldom productive of much harm, as even if the dog is mad the clothing absorbs the virus before the teeth reach the flesh. Most of all the fatal cases are where the person was bitten on some naked spot.

If one is situated where he can take a Turkish bath soon after being bitten, do so by all means. The perspiration will help to carry off the poison that may lurk in the system.—Herald of Health.

Water Boilers.

The Boston Journal of Chemistry, some time since, made the following suggestion in relation to water boilers upon stoves: A brass or copper vessel tinned upon the inside, and holding several gallons, is usually found connected with cooking stoves used in families. As this vessel is kept full of hot water, which is used for ordinary culinary purposes, it is important that no deleterious agent connected with the metal should be employed in its construction. A recent analysis has been made of a specimen of tinned brass plate used for making these boilers, and it was found that the tin contained 26 per cent. of lead. How far this may serve to cause injury it is impossible to say. It is certain, however, that lead is an objectionable metal to be brought in contact with culinary utensils, and hence its use must be condemned. An iron boiler lined with porcelain would be much safer, and perhaps not more costly. We understand such a vessel is constructed, and if so, it would certainly be a much safer one to employ as a reservoir of hot water for constant household use.

Cost of Converting the Heathen.

Mr. Francis F. Abbott argued before the Free Religionist Convention at New York that the foreign missions of the Christian churches had been a failure, in the fact that they had accomplished comparatively few conversions at a very large expense. That we may give his position correctly, we quote his statement from the report of the Herald:

The American Board of Missions has been established about 63 years. During the first 62 years it has received a grand total of $14,183,248.65, or an average per year of $229,084.65. Up to the year 1863 the number of converts was 325,580. The cost of each convert was therefore $467.56. The total number of laborers in the mission field was 1,278. The number of missionaries was 538; of missionary churches, 173; which gave an average of 57 members and 7 laborers to each church. During 61 years there was an annual average gain of 388 members. If they went to the general statistics of Christendom as to this, by statistics taken from the Encyclopedia Britanica to 1857, and from statistics furnished by Dr. Lowry and Dr. Anderson, from that year to 1868, the total amount spent on missions by the supporters of the Protestant faith was $47,276,339. The expenses of the missions for the 11 years showed that the cost of each convert was $1,311. There was no reason to suppose that the price was less to-day. The population of the globe is 1,000,000,000 of people. The Protestant part is 100,000,000, which gave a remainder of 900,000,000 as a proper subject for conversion. Now the fact is that the world to-day does not contain money enough to purchase its own salvation. Look, too, at the time it would take for the conversion of the world at the rate of 3,258 per year. For the accomplishment of this it would require a period of not less than 267,212 years.

Tobacco Versus Intellect.

At the nearest calculation the internal revenue report last year showed that the United States consumed about ten million cigars during that time. Many old smokers prefer the pipe to the cigar, and probably as much tobacco is consumed in that way as in cigars. However out of the way numerically the previous statement may be, it is true that there are in this country 12,294 manufacturers of cigars, and that they employ 71,491 men. Wherever tobacco can be raised, the farmer finds it one of the most ready-paying crops, and consequently is very apt to go into it. Its use increases from year to year in a greater ratio than the population. People differ so widely as to its effects, that it is only just, whenever a candid statement is made of any test, to give it publicity. Recently, at the Polytechnic School in Paris, one of the professors inquired into the habits of the one hundred and sixty students there, and then made a comparison between their devotions to study and to smoke. He found that in each grade of the school the students who did not smoke outranked those who did smoke, and that the scholarship of the smokers steadily deteriorated as the smoking continued. On account of several trustworthy reports of such a nature, the Minister of Public Instruction in France issued a circular to the directors of colleges and schools, forbidding tobacco to students, as injurious to physical and intellectual development.

Values of Gold and Silver.

Many people have a desire to know the value of gold and silver in bulk, and to this end we have secured the following from Prof. J. F. L. Schirmer, Superintendent of the Branch Mint in this city, and it may be relied upon as correct. The fineness of Colorado gold and the calculation of values on gold and silver are also given. It is a matter of considerable value, and should be cut out and preserved.

One ton (2,000 pounds avoirdupois) of gold or silver contains 29,163 troy ounces, and, therefore, the value of a ton of silver is $37,704.84.

A cubic foot of pure gold weighs 1,218.75 pounds avoirdupois; a cubic foot of pure silver weighs 656.25 pounds avoirdupois.

One million dollars gold coin weighs 3,685.8 pounds avoirdupois, one million dollars silver coin weighs 58,929.6 pounds avoirdupois.

If there is one per cent. of gold and silver in one ton of ore, it contains 291.63 ounces, troy, of either of these metals.

The average fineness of the Colorado gold is 781 in 1,000, and the natural alloy; gold, 781; silver, 209; copper, 10; total, 1,000.

The calculations at the mint are made on the basis that 43 ounces of standard gold, or 900 fine (coin), is worth $800, and 11 ounces of silver 900 (coin) is worth $12.80.—Denver News.

Western Union Telegraph.

[New York (Nov. 12) Cor. Chicago Times.]

Extraordinary developments have come to light here to-day, to the effect that six weeks ago English capitalists, with $10,000,000, came here to buy up the Western Union Telegraph Company's stock, for the purpose of ultimately selling the stock to the Government, as a means of the establishment of the postal telegraph scheme. The only hindrance to this scheme of the English capitalists was Commodore Vanderbilt, who controls a very large interest in Western Union. The English party, coming here during the financial panic, had made immense purchases, and felt sanguine of accomplishing their objects. They had even gone so far as to buy up lobbyists in Washington, and had plans arranged for the coup d'etat. Commodore Vanderbilt, however, got wind of the scheme, and to-day went to work and rushed the stock up from 49 to 54½. The English party will now have to raise a very large addition to their present capital, if they hope to carry through their original scheme.

Funeral Etiquette.

Says the Christian Union: "The Rev. W. H. H. Murray, of Boston, in officiating at the funeral of his father, cetainly violated a conventional rule; but who shall say that he violated any law of inherent propriety, or that he did not set an example that in many circumstances might be wisely imitated? When 'a man comes to his grave in a full age, like as a shock of corn cometh in his season,' who is likely to be better qualified than a loving, reverential son to utter the words which the occasion demands—words of affection, comfort, hope and exultation? We can imagine a case in which a son might well shrink from officiating at his father's funeral; but in many instances we should think such a service on the part of a son would be peculiarly appropriate and beautiful."

A Murderer's Confession.

Nelson E. Wade was hung at Williamsport, Pa., on the 6th of November for the murder of an aged couple named John and Isabella McBride, in July last. The deed was one of the most fiendish and brutal in the entire catalogue of crime, as will be seen from the appended confession of the wretch:

"I am American born; and have relatives living near here. I was born out on the Blooming Grove road, beyond the Poor-House. The afternoon I committed the murder I walked up the tow-path from the city; went to McBride's house, and calculated that it was about the time they had done their milking. Last winter, when I was at Glosser's, near by, Mrs. Glosser told me of the trunk up-stairs, and while I was there last winter I made it my business to find out how much money these old folks had. On reaching the house on Tuesday afternoon, I was met in the yard by one of the dogs, which barked at me. I soon made up with him, and walked into the house, when McBride wanted to know what I wanted there. I told him I wanted a drink of milk, when he told me to go to the cellar where the old lady was. She asked me if I had money to pay for the milk. From the cellar I returned to ask the old man for some bread, but found he had bolted the door. When he unbolted it I shoved my foot in and the old man struck at me. I then knocked him down with my fist. The dog then made at me, and I knocked him down. I then struck the old man with the stick three times, when he cried, "Murder," I then hit him another rap with the club. I then went to the cellar and struck the old woman; but, as I have told you several times, I did not shoot her, as I had no pistol, but bought one at Trout's yesterday. When I came out of the cellar after killing the old woman, the old man was up on his hands and feet, and the dog was licking the blood off his face. I then hit him again. I then procured an ax, went up stairs and broke open a chest, and found the trunk I had heard Mrs. Glosser talk about. It was too heavy, and I made two trips that night, carrying away the money. The club I used was cut in the woods near by with a small jack-knife. If they will look in the corn-field they will see where the grass is trampled down. That is where I looked over the money. I got between $60,000 and $70,000. I will not tell where it is. When I come to die I will tell some poor man where it is; but no rich man shall have it. There are two bags buried in the city, two above and two below. I have had fifty names in my lifetime, but Nelson E. Wade is my right name. Were I to do this over again I would exchange all the silver for paper money, That's what bothered me, it was so heavy,"

Two or three days before his execution, when approached by a friend, Wade said, "I hope you will have the execution arranged at as near 10 o'clock as possible. I have an engagement to dine in h—ll at 12, and I do not wish to be disappointed."

The Best Physician.

The celebrated Dr. Sydenham had a patient whom he had long prescribed for. At last Sydenham acknowledged that his skill was exhausted—that he could not pretend to advise him further. "But," said he, "there is a Dr. Robinson who lives at Inverness, who is more skilled in complaints of this kind than I am; you had better consult him. I will provide you with a letter of introduction, and I hope you will return much better."

The patient was a man of fortune, and soon took the road; but traveling was a very different undertaking then from what it is now, and a journey from London to Inverness was not a trifling one. He arrived, however, at the place of destination; but no Dr. Robinson was to be found, nor had any one of that name ever been in the town. This, of course, enraged the gentleman very much, and he took the road back to London, raging and vowing vengeance on the doctor. On his arrival, he vented all his rage on the latter, and abused him for sending him on a journey of so many miles for nothing. When his fury was a little abated, "Well, now," said Sydenham, "after all, is your health any better?" "Better!" said he; "yes, sir, it is better. I am, sir, as well as ever I was in my life; but no thanks to you for that." "Well," said Sydenham, "you have still to thank Dr. Robinson. I wanted to send you on a journey with an object in view. I knew it would do you good; in going you had Dr. Robinson in contemplation, and in returning you were equally busy in thinking of scolding me."

"I Thought So."

A minister had a negro in his family. One Sunday, when he was preaching, he happened to look in the pew where the negro was, and could hardly contain himself as he saw the negro, who could not read nor write a word, scribbling away most industriously. After meeting he said to the negro, "Tom, what were you doing in church?" "Taking notes, massa; all de gemmen takes notes." "Bring your notes here and let me see them." Tom brought his notes, which looked more like Chinese than English. "Why, Tom, that is all nonsense." "I thought so, massa, all the time that you was preaching it."

Postal Cards.

According to the forthcoming figures of the annual report of the Postmaster-General, the demand for that handy little innovation, the postal card, exceeds all expectation. It was estimated that one hundred million of these cards would be used the first year. They have now been in use about five months, and more than sixty four millions have been issued. It was natural that the novelty would make the first sales very large; but the postal card appears to be a permanently-adopted American convenience.

GOVERNOR HENDRICKS' POLITICAL OPINIONS.

[From Chicago Times' "Interview."]

Governor Hendriske said that in his position of Governor, he wished to avoid expressing any opinion on political questions, and was, as far as regarded the present condition of parties in the State, without any accurate information. He declined to be interviewed on the subject. The reporter expressed regret at the decision of the Governor, but suggested that at any rate the Governor would not decline to take part in a conversation on the subject. Governor Hendricks said he would willingly converse on the political situation, with the understanding that it was not to be an interview. Readers of the Times will accordingly bear in mind that the following report of the Governor's views is not an "interview," but a "conversation" The reporter asked if he had paid any attention to the recent elections.

Governor Hendricks—No, I have not carefully studied them. With regard to the elections in Wisconsin, I may say I was surprised at the result. In our own State we had no State election calculated to show the present position of parties. The only officers elected were judicial, and political considerations did not enter into the contest in any district.

Reporter—Did the farmers' movement take any part in the contest?

Governor Hendricks—The farmers' or grange movement in this State is not inconsiderable, but in only two cases were candidates nominated who were in any way regarded as farmers' candidates. In one the candidate was more of a fool than a farmer, and only received a few votes; the other, a Democrat, ran in a district against the regular nominee, and by taking the vote of his county on personal grounds enabled the Republican candidate to be elected by a large majority. The grange movement, though far less considerable than in any other Western State, may possibly develope into importance. It comprises members of both parties.

Reporter—Has the question of transportation agitated the State at all?

Governor Hendricks—Not to any extent; certainly not to the extent it has in Illinois, Iowa, Wisconsin and other North-western States.

The conversation turned upon the condition of political parties in the State.

The Governor said: The lines between the two great political parties are finally drawn here. The State is very evenly divided between Republicans and Democrats, and the accession of a small body of sympathizers from either of these parties to other, with a full vote poled, would give it the victory. The present financial distress, however, would, in the event of a general election occurring this fall, operate most prejudiciausly against the interests of the Republican party.

Reporter—What is your view as to the future?

Governor Hendricks—Conversationally speaking, I believe that the Democratic party will preserve its organization and name, and will go to the polls as it always has done. But there will be this difference: It will have extended its boundaries, liberalized its platform, and thrown open the doors of its organization so that all the opponents of the present Administration, all the disaffected in the ranks of the Republican party, will be able to find a place therein.

Reporter—Aad so you look for victory with such a liberalized Democracy?

Governor Hendricks—I have no doubt that, at the present time, with financial crisis now upon us, that the Republican party could be defeated by such a party as that to which I have referred.

Reporter—What would be the result of the adoption of a new name for the recognized party.

Governor Hendricks—I do not think it would be advisable. Of course I am not in favor of retaining a name when it has lost all signification, and if victory were more certain to be secured for Democratic ideas by giving to the liberalized Democracy a new title, I would be in favor of it. But I do not think that any advantage would be gained by so doing. On the contrary, I thing there would be a positive loss.

Reporter—How?

Governor Hendricks—By the indifference leading to absenteeism of old hardshell Democrats.

Reporter—Do you think that the adoption of the new name would drive old Democrats to the support of the paternalist party?

Governor Hendricks—No, I do not. But it would, I think, with many, have the effect of making them stay at home on the poling day.

Reporter—What was the extent of the Liberal Republican vote cast in the State at the late Presidential election?

Governor Hendricks—It was considerable. I could not say how many votes, but they were scattered all over the State.

Reporter—Do you thank that vote has increased or decreased since the election?

Governor Hendricks—I think it remains about the same.

Reporter—What is the status of the temperance question in your State?

Governor Hendricks—It stands in this way: A Republican Legislature passed a temperance law, containing several restricive provisions, and I signed it. The constitution provides that a bill vetoed by the Governor can be carried over the veto by the same majority that voted for the bill in the first place. This practically cuts off the power of the veto. The bill has been declared constitutional by the Supreme Court, which stands four Democrats and one Republican.

Reporter—Has the temperance question taken any place in the local contests?

Governor Hendricks—Not very much.

Reporter—What is the German vote in the State?

Governor Hendricks—I believe it is about one-tenth of the total vote.

Reporter—Which party stands most committed to the temperance law?

Governor Hendricks—It is a Republican measure. With the exception of my having signed the bill, as Governor, the Democratic party are free of the question. They have, however, adopted resolutions at conventions against oppressively restrictive laws, and in favor of a fair licensing system.

Reporter—Is the law enforced?

Governor Hendricks—Partly. In some districts it is; in others it is not.

I. That the cost of Government, exclusive of the interest on the Public Debt, is at the rate of $210,000,000 a year, against $180,000,000 last year.

II. That the Civil and Miscellaneous expenses are at the rate of $74,000,000 a year, which is about the same as they were last year, and double what they were in 1865, when the price of gold was about 250.

III That the cost of the War Department is at the rate of $59,000,000 a year, or $13,000,000 more than last year.

IV. That the cost of the Navy Department is at the rate of $36,000,000 a year, or $13,000,000 more than last year.

V. That the cost of the Interior Department, including Indians and Pensions, is at the rate of $40,000,000 a year, or $3,000,000 more than last year.

We have heard of wooden nutmegs, sanded sugar, and the apples of Sodterfeits should be placed these statеom, and we are furthermore of the opinion that at the head of such counments of expenses issued from the Treasury Department. If they represent a fact, the fact is an ugly one; if they do not, what excuse is there for the misrepresentation?

We charged yesterday that the Treasury accounts were a long way behind the facts, whereas the Treasury has given out that its October disbursements were extraordinarily heavy. But the above figures show the reverse. The monthly totals of the figures given above are as follows:

Disbursements, August	$20,233,502 82
Disbursements, September	17,651,297 42
Disbursements, October	14,832,865 37
Grand total	$52,717,666 61

The October disbursements are much the smallest of the three amounts. But, we repeat, we have no confidence in the figures. The only conceiveable purpose that their publication serves is to mystify the public and show the opinion which the Treasury officials have of what the people of the United States require of them

WISHART
PINE TREE!
Tar Cordial,
NATURE'S GREAT REMEDY
FOR
Throat and Lungs.

It is gratifying to us to inform the public that Dr. L. Q. C. Wishart's Pine Tree Tar Cordial, for Throat and Lungs diseases, has gained an enviable reputation from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, and from thence to some of the first families of Europe, not through the press alone, but by persons throughout the States actually benefited and cured at his office. While he publishes less, so say our reporters, he is unable to supply the demand. It gains and holds its reputation—

First. Not by stopping cough, but by loosening and assisting nature to throw off the unhealthy matter collected about the throat and bronchial tubes, which causes irritation.

Second. It removes the cause of irritation of the mucous membrane and bronchial tubes, assists the lungs to act and throw off the unhealthy secretions, and purifies the blood

Third. It is free from squills, lobelia, ipecac and opium, of which most throat and lung remedies are composed, which allay cough only, and disorganize the stomach. It has a soothing effect on the stomach, acts on the liver and kidneys, and lymphatic and nervous regions, thus reaching to every part of the system, and in its invigorating and purifying effects it has gained a reputation which it must hold above all others in the market.

Captain Fry's Appeal.

The fallowing manly letter was written by Captain Fry, of the Virginius, to Captain General Burriel, appealing for the lives of his crew:

With the permission of the Consul, I wish to say a few words in favor of the crew of the Virginius and the mitigation of their punishment.

The first pilot had just escaped from a shipwreck and needed an advance of salary to buy clothes and have them made. Nothing was said to him in regard to blockade running, but, on the contrary, as I had the authorization of the owners and had prepared the papers of the vessel, I notified every one that we were to be occupied in trade with the islands, with passengers from Puerto Simones, in Costa Rica, or taking cattle to Cuba, as I believed that the vessel might do so. From the time when the arms arrived on board I thought that there would be no occasion for a portion of the men to see the Consul. The Consul in Puerto Principe sent for me, but I did not receive his message until I was on board, having been compelled to leave port by order of the authorities. There was a guard on board to prevent desertion by the passengers. I know that some of them protested, but Varona let them know that he would answer propositions of this class with the pistol. Running blockade is considered a risky business among sailors, for which good pay is received. For years past it is notorious the number of vessels that were employed in it during the American war, although captures were numerous, not a single life was lost. The greater part of the prisoners were set at liberty after a short imprisonment. I never heard a word before the night of my sentence of the Cuban law and the proclamation relating to an attempt to introduce arms into Cuba. If, with superior opportunities, I was ignorant that the case could be decided by any other law than international, how complete must have been the ignorance of the poor people. I was continually in the company of people who ought to have known it, and not one alluded to the fact. In a word, I believe that it is not known, and that the world will be painfully surprised at learning the sacrifice of these lives.

The Consul knows well that I am not pleading for my life. I have not prayed to God for it nor even to the Blessed Mother. I have neither home nor country, a victim of war and persecution, the way of prosperity being closed to me to such a point that I have not been able to provide bread for my wife and seven childred, who know what it is to suffer for the necessaries of life. My life is one of suffering, and I look upon what has happened to me as a benefit of God; and it is not for me, therefore, to ask favors of any one.

The engineer, Knight, I know came contrary to his will. He was bitterly opposed to it, as I learned form the person who obliged him to come.

Spaniards, the world is not so full of people who prefer honor to life Save him. Poor Bosa, poor gentleman, with a heart as tender and compassionate as that of a woman, of irreproachable honor, his business was that of charity. He was devoted to others, and thought that he was on board the vessel for the benefit of their health. I believe that he will not make this appear himself. I do it for him. I believe he would do no harm to any one. The man Bribon was my servant, hired by the day when we were in port and not inscribed on the roll. He wanted to be set on shore at Jeremias. He was disembarked at Paimitos and lost the opportunity. He is almost an idiot They call him Cibanillo, and he is of Venezuelan origin. He was a favorite on board, and ought not to suffer Another poor fellow was taken on board to keep him from dying of sickness and hunger. He was sent to the hospital from the boat and permitted to come on board through charity. The greater portion of the crew were entrapped by their lodging house keepers, who gained possession of them and watched their opportunity to put them on board, receiving advances on their wages. Spaniards, I believe I am the only one who dies in the entire Christian faith of our holy religion. Consider the souls of these poor people. Give them time and opportunity to ask mercy of God. I know that you must fulfill your duty, but my blood ought to be sufficient because innocent and defenceless will suffer with my fall. That these considerations have influence with the authorities, to whom I beg to appeal These poor people had no knowledge of what you think their crime. Pardon me if I say that I don't believe their death would have in the fate of Cuba the good effect the law foresees. Our civilization is so opposed to such a proceeding. I don't say this in a tone of complaint, but we are accustomed to at least identify the victims whom we are going to sacrifice According to our view, there should have been some intervention of our government; its influence should have pronounced and perhaps in that way many lives might have been saved without compromising the dignity of Spain. Senors, farewell! I know that the members of the council who condemn me accomplished a painful duty. Let them remember us in their prayers to God, and ask their wives and children to do the same for us.

Respectfully, JOHN FRY.

Written on board the Tornado, November 7, 1873

State Finances.

Commenting upon the exhibit of State finances by the Auditor and Treasurer of State, the Indianapolis Sentinel says:

It is only when the appeal comes direct to the pocket that the average man and brother arouses himself to an interest in taxation, economy, finance and subjects of kindred dryness. Congress passed session after session in profligate squandering of the public treasure, and the people seemed perfectly indifferent. It finally made the grab and the public indignation rose like Jonah's gourd, but did not disappear in the same way—has not disappeared and will not disappear. Yet the grab was but a feeble titbit compared withe the prodigies of corruption that have been carried on. It is not easy to account for these curious discrepancies in public judgment. These points are suggested by the amusing attempt of journals of the baser organic sort, to make the commendation of one public official a curse to his predecessor. To creatures of the sort whatever is not of "the party" is not of good report, and any misrepresentation which may prejudice his service or belittle his associates, is a perfectly justifiable trick. The recent reports of the Auditor and Treasurer have suggested comparisons which honorable men and fair minded newspapers may make without unjust reflection on men, but which the baser sort seek as a coveted chance to belie and mislead. In the ignoble hope of distracting attention from present scenes, the Legislature of 1871 is dragged again before the people and loaded with the responsibility of the $603,000 which was not transferred from the sinking fund to the general fund. Why was it not transferred? Did not a bill pass the house, introduced by Mr. Neff, of Putnam county, to make the said transfer, whence it went to the senate for passage? And was it not frustrated, as all the interests of the State were outraged, by the indefensible, disgraceful breaking up of the Legislature by the Republicans? It comes with bad grace to pile the disasters wrought by that despicable desertion of the people upon the former State officers for the sake of a pitiful attempt at a little party capital. The Legislature of 1871 does not appear of record to have stopped payment of any indebtedness as all the institutions and salaried officers were paid as usual An officer elected at a stated salary carries his pay with the office, And it will be seen on examination that at the commencement of the fiscal year 1872, all the benevolent institutions had money unexpended, except perhaps one, the House of Refuge. The only debt paid by the Legislature of 1872 special session, and the regular session of 1873, which was omitted by the Legislature of 1871, was the specific bills. These were not passed upon for the sole reason that the "grab party" rebelled openly against a majority doctrine, and destroyed a quorum because they could not have their own way. That is a black record to dig up, and one that arouses indignation whenever it appears. Better let that portion of Indiana's history be forgotten, if it can be, by all men. There is no disposition here to shield any wrong that Democrats, or any body else, may be guilty of; but common decency as well as fairness recoil at any mean attempt to tear down one set of good men in order to uphold other good men. In truth, most of the canal bonds were paid off with this very $500,000, and the large loans of $717,000 this year were made necessary by the heavy appropriations of the last Legislature and the current expenses of the present State administration. Look at one item. The cost of the Legislature of 1871 was $82,000, while the special and regular sessions of 1872-3 swept away $200,000. So the current expenses of the present regime for the public institutions and the removation of the old rat trap State House, probably all desirable enough, are, nevertheless, piling up bills on the people in a way not to boast about. It is not a safe operation to crowd too heavily on the merits of raising the State assessment to fifteen cents; the less said to the people about that the easier it will be for the salary grab eight dollars a day legislators who did it. All the accounts of expenses are kept distinct, and it is easy enough to trace up the paths of economy and extravagance and see where they lead respectively. The general condition of State affairs in Indiana, compared with other States at this time, is a matter of congratulation. But in the past there are records for both parties that are no credit to the Satte. On the other hand the State has some good and honest men now among her best citizens who have served in her public offices with clean records, which it is no honor to try to cast dirt upon now for mere narrow party purposes.

An Unexpected Answer.

During the progress of the trial of the case of Widow Mathews against the Elevator company, in the Circuit Court in St. Louis, Col. Slayback, counsel for the defendant, conceived the idea that one Murphy, a witness for the plaintiff, was a suitor for the hand of the widow, and on the eve of leading her to the altar. Getting Murphy on the stand, the lawyer endeavored to bring the fact before the jury, and this was the upshot of the examination.

"Mr. Murphy are you any relation to the plaintiff?"

"No, sir, I am not."

"Don't you expect to be?"

"Such a thing might happen."

"Now, are you not going to marry her?"

"I am afraid not"

"You are afraid you won't, eh? Well, now, don't you expect to marry her?"

"If my wife should die, and the widow remain single till that time, such a thing might happen."

The jurors and spectators burst into a roar of laughter, and Murphy chuckled at the cunning manner in which he had drawn the lawyer on. The Colonel had nothing more to say on the matrimonial question.

An Opening Speech.

The Era (Pa.) Observer is responsible for this: "In the early days of Pithole, the pious oil men thought it necessary to have a Sabbath school. One of the leading young men was chosen superintendent. The position was a new one to him, but he determined not to shrink from the responsibility. Thinking it would be proper for him to make a little opening speech, he cleared his throat and started in as follows: 'Children you are very fortunate in being born in a Christian land. There are thousands in the world not so fortunate. It is peculiarly gratifying to know that you live in that portion of the earth where the rock pours forth rivers of oil. Now, my dear children, there's the Mormons they worship old Morm; there's the Mahommedans, they worship old Mahom; the Heathens, they worship old Heath; the Hindoos, they worship old Hind; and there's the Pagans, they worship old Pag, while here we are worshiping whom we please. Teachers will now hear their classes recite.'"

What makes an honest man? Honesty is not a natural virtue, man must be drilled to it. It is after a man has looked at temptation when he has been put to proof, that he is to be judged There is not a farmer on Long Island that is as honest as the men in Wall street. Why? Because these men are old veterans. The old farmer is good as men go, but he would probably break down at the first offer. I asked a friend not long ago, who was giving me a sad story of the purchasable values of different members of society in the Legislature, how it was with farmers. "Bless your soul," said he, "they are the cheapest stuff we buy in the Legislature." I am not up for election, just now, and therefore am not obliged to call farmers the 'bone and sinew of the country."—Henry Ward Beecher.

TURKEY.

A THANKSGIVING ODE.

When is the turkey handsomest?
With sunshine on his brazen breast,
When every feather is like a scale
On a glittering suit of knightly mail;
When his tail is spread, a splendid fan,
As he struts before his faithful clan,
With blue, bald head and threatening eye,
And wattles red as a stormy sky?
With lofty step and war-cry loud
He marshals forth the quittering crowd,
Or leads their dance across the plain,
Or heads their march through waving grain,
Intent on plunder, red with pride,
Like warrior not to be defied,
In all the pomp of battle drest—
Then is the turkey handsomest!

When is the turkey handsomest?
When he is killed and plucked and dressed;
His spurs hacked off and thrown aside
With all the trappings of his pride,
He lies, a goodly shape of snow,
On stall or dresser, making show
Of swelling breast and rampant legs;
Or, dangling from the larder's pegs,
Tells to the cook-maid's practiced eye
How fast the days are flitting by,
How soon appears the day of days,
The hour of Turkey's reign and praise;
There, hanging in his smooth white vest,
Is not the turkey handsomest?

When is the turkey handsomest?
Ah! when again he shows his breast,
Brown with the sunshine of the fire,
Crisp as a lady's silk attire,
With unctuous juices dripping down
In pools of gravy rich and brown;
Odorous as any spicy air
That blows across an orchard fair,
His bosom swelled with savory meat
Of sausages and bread-crumbs sweet,
His pinions neatly skewered and tied
With giblets tucked in either side;
His legs resigned to any fate,
Rampant no more, but meekly straight;
Beside him cranberry, ruby clear,
With groves of brittle celery near;
As stately as a king he lies,
The center of admiring eyes.
Now is the turkey handsomest,
Arrayed before the hungry guest,
Of all the viands first and best!
His life well lived, his woes at rest,
And the platter he lies on gayly dressed,
Now is the turkey handsomest!
—Our Young Folks.

TWENTY YARDS OF THE LATE PANIC.

This is not a discussion of the Woman Question. Its confines are women's extravagance in dress on one hand, and the higher education of women on the other. The conservative reader need not be deterred by any apprehension of the suffrage plea; and he or she who sees the Woman Question radically—who constantly beholds in the remote—and impossible—future a revolution undoing nature and wiping out divine statutes—a revolution that is to demonstrate the superiority of a little class of mad theorists over God, and, hardly less amazingly, over Matter, such a mind will not be indignant with an attempt to show that somewhat of radicalism may be urgently demanded, in adjusting the privileges of women to the rights of men.

Ministers do not often say very sensible things on practical subjects. There is no time and little room for robust, vigorous and trenchant thought in speculative theology, that includes banking and stock speculations. In handling the late panic, the evangelical pulpits issued from their legal tender reserve a curious sort of currency, with a scripture text in its face, its back green, intended to be the religious lesson on the causes, the nature, and the consequences of financial tempests. The spectacle they presented may be illustrated by an imaginary parallel. If a convention of gamblers held an active professional convention in the Chicago Exposition building, and that beautiful structure were to tremble and totter and fall, burying the multitude of criminals in its ruins, the ministers should proceed to make sermons on the principles of architecture, taking for their text the psalm verse: "Nisi Dominus edificaverit domum, in vano laboraverunt qui edificant eam." Unless the Lord build the house, in vain do the—contractors worry. The reverend speakers should enlarge then on the universality of architecture—civil, military and naval—on the tendency of mankind to live—in simple truth, to live in houses; and the various kinds of these, their cost, with and without basements, the appropriate furnishings, the harmony to be observed between carpets and frescoes, and the unity of the upholstery with the style of the exterior, including the pattern of the fence-pickets; all this should be detailed with the dignity and force inseparable from the office of a modern apostle. The more learned might enter into a succinct history of architecture. There were the pyramids of Egypt and of Mexico, the cairns of Britain. Following these, perhaps cotemporaneous with them, the Druidical temples, the dolmens of Brittany, the fortifications of Mycenæ, and the mounds of Arizona and Central America. Then the simple Doric pillar, and the multiform varieties of styles with which imagination and luxury have adorned religion and beautified the public places and the woods—the distinctions being properly noted among entablatures, colonnades, cornices and capitals. This could be amplified sufficiently to occupy all but the final five minutes of the discourse; and the word of God might be alluded to with gloves on during this finale. The sin of gambling should form no portion whatever of the discourse, precisely as the sins which induced the panic, and the direct lesson of simplicity of life to be derived from its consequences, formed no part of the discourses of these reverend gentlemen on that very recent event.

One of this class was exceptional in what he said. He walked through his Sunday school, reflecting on the panic, and observed that the children were attired in satins and laces and silks; and he uttered in his sermon the reflection that this observation gave: "These children are taught nothing of the virtue of self-denial." The little girls whom he saw before him are to be the young ladies, the wives, the mothers of his church; gaudy milliners' miniatures of all the Sunday schools are to be become the women of all the churches while these churches last. Few of them have the faintest perception of the virtue of self-denial.

Jay Cooke himself will not dissuade us that self-denial is at the bottom of the panic. No need of financial permutations to prove this. Every man knows it in his own breast; every woman in hers. Extravagance caused the panic. Women's extravagance bears a large portion of the responsibility, and men are ready enough to tell their wives so, and fathers and mothers to tell their daughters. Let those who cry out—now that the roof has fallen—ask themselves whether this extravagance of women is not an effect instead of a cause. Are not women just what men have made them?

They are.

Women attire themselves gorgeously because men demand that they shall do so. This demand does not consist of an injunction to spend money. It comes upon women in the requirements of society, in the obligations of tradition, in the necessities of sex. The modifications of fashions are as irresistible by women, as that sex is now socially placed, as the incoming tide is irresistible by the sand on the beach. Men make the fashions; men manufacture them; men indorse their patronage and purchase after manufacture; and the great bulk of men not engaged in evolving bonnet-frames and cutting dresses and shipping the models and the new materials to the four corners of the universe, are as abjectly slavish to women's adoption of the new caprices as are women themselves.

The men who contrive fashions desire merely to make money. The men whose united opinion compels women to patronize their contrivances, are aware that each succeeding season necessitates the spending of more money than common sense approves, or the profit's of the year's business justify; yet the majority of these men will spend the money, for two reasons:

1. Because they want their wives and daughters to look as well as other men's wives and daughters.

2. Because they know that, as society is constituted, the majority of women hold their rank solely by the expenditure of money. Men have made society.

"Halt, now!" cries the indignant father; "let us unmake society." Very well, let us. How? Time cannot be annihilated. Women must have occupation as well as men. There are twenty-four hours for her, as well as for the sex whom a kind Providence and society permit to be daily employed in active, honorable work—work that satisfies the brain, that fills the mind to repletion, and keeps the faculties and the hands busy. Suppose men did not work during the day, what is to prevent them from becoming the frivolous, fashionable fools that idle, uneducated women are? We halt again! Women should not be idle; need not be uneducated. Very true. But men are responsible for the idleness; and they have insisted on the uneducation. Men have had the mold in their hands since the creation. God made men, and men have made the mold and women. It is, as Milton said, "He, for God only; she, for God in him;" and quoted the Scriptures: "Man is the image and glory of God; she is the glory of the man"—if she be any glory unto him.

The idleness and uneducation of women are directly the result of a sex policy; that policy, begun by men; handed down, maintained and persisted in by men. They have compelled her to be idle; they have refused her education. If she work, they frown, and cast her out of—God help us!"—out of "society!" If she seek for higher education, they turn the key in the college gate, and one President says, "You are not strong enough;" and another writes, "Education would unfit you to be wives and mothers"—as if mothers' ignorance were an essential quality in milk for babes! And another gravely argues that it is a violation of religion, as if God's religion for woman includes faith only, and he shall admit her to salvation in proportion as she shall lack reason! The time is that women cry out against the uneducation and the idleness which men haye imposed upon the sex by ordinance. The time is that panic comes and men trace it to woman's extravagance, and trace that extravagance to idleness and uneducation, and men reproach women for that vice and this fault. But who is responsible? There is not active work for all women to do; it is not desirable or necessary that all young women should go out into the world and work.

Now, we halt again. All young men do not go into the world and work. What is done with a son who does not need to go into employment at sixteen? He is sent to college. What is done with a daughter at the same time? She is sent into society! A young woman's education is completed just when a young man's begins! The young men come home mentally robust, intellectually arrogant. They patronize their sisters, and other young men's sisters. They are certain women are unable to bear the labor of college education. They are convinced that higher education for women is against the spirit of Christianity! They laugh at women's weaknesses; they sneer at intellectual inferiority; they denounce her extravagance in dress, while insisting on it; and they publicly insult and defame the few ultra women who dare tell these undeniable truths on stolen rostrums; and whose lives, upright, self-sacrificing, honorable, and pure as the snow falling from heaven are living and eloquent illustrations that women need not be idle, may not be uneducated. While the sons have been away at college, acquiring the dogmatism of sex, amid the rest of their learning, what have the daughters been doing? What men demand of them—learning the profession of extravagance, making of themselves birds of plumage, with a proper regard to keeping their throats closed, because the voices of women are offensive to man's public ear. All the birds applaud the peacock's plumes, but they unite in a request that the lovely creature remain silent.

The proposition that women have nothing to say worth saying, is proved by prohibiting her from saying anything. The proposition that she is not capable of college training is demonstrated by keeping her out of college. The proposition that she is inferior to man intellectually, is established by throwing a challenge in her face, and then refusing to choose weapons or appoint a place of meeting. "It comes to this: having by force taken possession of the means of education, men turn to cast shame on women that they are left outside," says the Westminster Review.

The late panic is a practical and pointed discourse on this question of better education for girls. Men have the issue in their own hands. Shall young ladies be passed through the society-gate into the domain of personal extravagance which has done its great work in producing the panic, and be confined in the curriculum of uselessness, of dissipation, of money-spending, of novel-reading, of bonnet-studying, of contemptible worthlessness for men's wives, and mothers of children who will not be born with silver spoons in their mouths? Or shall the years from sixteen to twenty-three and four be devoted to school work, to science, language and literature; to mathematics, which make a woman practical and teach her to count pennies; to music and the arts, which render her agreeable and graceful; to literature, whose beneficence will so surround her later life that she will not waste unnecessary time on dress makers and novel factors. Shall a young girl be made an educated, useful woman, or a frivolous, extravagant woman? Shall she be brought up to thoughtfulness and modesty and self-denial, or will fathers persist in making a walking show-window of her, to her ruin and his?

The question of expense cannot be raised. It will cost one-fourth the sum to send a girl to school, from sixteen to twenty-three, that dresses a young lady in society during that time. The question of marriage is not pertinent. American women are not ready to be married under twenty-five. It is nonsense to say that she should be learning housekeeping. There is nothing in domestic work that an educated woman will not learn in a month. The question of religion retires, blushing.

Science is pure and holy; society is not. Class recitations are better than balls, and philosophy is more modest than flirting. The question of health is settled. Study, properly conducted, is invigorating and delightful; are the dissipations of young ladies' fashionable life?

When they have finished these years of study, what then? Marriage, for those that are to be married. Will they make inferior wives because they are educated, honorable, high-minded, tender and loving? Because they have spent the young years of their womanhood in study, instead of in extravagance of dress, in intellectual development and strengthening of body instead of in a waste of mind and heart and body. Will not gentle, strong, and intelligent women bring forth stronger, fairer, and brighter children than they whose heads are without thought, whose hearts are selfish from frivolity and gratification; whose physical strength has been wasted away; or they whose heads are thick, and whose tongues are coarse and whose hands are heavy with the brutality of ignorance? What is there about the intelligence and nobility and strength and devotion of man that is not true about the intelligence and love and fidelity of woman?

Teaching, and the other professions, trades and occupations, for those who do not marry. All women are not called to the marriage state. This is on no less respected an authority than St. Paul. Nor does he relegate to the convent those who do not marry. The wants of the world to be best filled by unmarried women are not limited to the convents. There is a pressing need of educated women for heads of establishments in which large numbers of young girls are employed. Educated women only can secure these places, and the safety of thousands of their sex will soon be dependent upon the accomplishment of this necessary change. Only few women will go into the professions; but it is their right. "Woman's work is circumscribed by her physical powers; man's is not. Therefore, in all things a woman can do as well as a man (and, of course, in all those which she can do better) the preference should be given to her," says the Catholic World, an excellent authority, also.

Forty yards makes a young woman's dress for the parlor now. Twenty would answer quite as well, if men agreed to think so, and young women's minds were so sufficiently occupied with better thought that they will not have time to put on twenty yards more. Good taste would be benefited by the change; so would the finances of the country.—Margaret F. Buchanan, in Lakeside Monthly.

Cut This Out.

Every person should understand how to treat a flesh wound, because one is liable to be placed in circumstances, away from surgical and veterinary aid, where he may save his own life, the life of a friend or of a beast, simply by the exercise of a little common sense. In the first place, close the lips of the wound with the hand, and hold them firmly together to check the flow of blood until several stitches can be taken and a bandage applied. Then bathe the wound for a long time in cold water. "Should it be painful," a correspondent says, "take a panful of burning coals and sprinkle upon them common brown sugar, and hold the wounded part in the smoke. In a few minutes the pain will be allayed, and recovery proceeds rapidly. In my case a rusty nail had made a bad wound in my foot. The pain and nervous irritation were severe. This was all removed by holding it in smoke for fifteen minutes, and I was able to resume my reading in comfort. We have often recommended it to others, with like results. Last week one of my men had a finger-nail torn out by a pair of ice-tongs. It became very painful, as was to have been expected. Held in sugar smoke for twenty minutes, the pain ceased and promised speedy recovery."

An Enormous Casting.

On Wednesday last, at Cold Spring, considerable interest was excited by the announcement that an enormous cannon was to be cast at the foundry, which would require thirty-three tons of molten iron for the rough casting, and which was to weigh 60,480 pounds when finished. A number of scientific gentlemen and interested spectators were gathered to witness the work, but unfortunately, when about half of the metal was safely conduited to the mold, the weight and height of the column burst the box, and the entire contents escaped. The metal had to be drawn from the furnaces and cast in the sand, that it might be reheated for another trial. The loss is variously estimated, some placing it as high as $5,000.—Poughkeepsie (N. Y.) Press.

The farms in England are ten times as large, on an average, as those of Ireland. There are only 200,000 tenant farmers in England, which contains 57,000 square miles; while Ireland, with only 32,000 square miles, has 700,000 tenant-farmers.

Rent—universal rent—is the cancer that eats out the vitals of Ireland. Before the famine year, the rents paid by 1,000,000 of farmers aggregated $40,000,000 to $50,000,000. Six hundred thousand farmers now pay an aggregate of nearly $90,000,000; and the townspeople pay $10,000,000 more—making one hundred millions a year of rent drained out of this island and spent in Great Britain.

In a Nutshell.

There may be a moral doubt as to whether the Virginius was sailing bona fide as an American vessel, although she carried the American flag at her masthead. But that the duty of the United States Government may be understood, it is only necessary to remember.

1. The American flag was at her masthead. Her American clearance papers were genuine. Of both these facts, the Spanish commander was perfectly aware. Nevertheless, he hauled down the flag, ran up the Spanish ensign in its place, hurried the ship into a Spanish port, shot four of her officers without trial, and massacred 47 of the crew within a few hours.

2. If the Virginius were not a bona fide American vessel, the Spanish commander was not her judge. That was the sole right of the American Government.

3. Even if caught in piracy, the officers and crew were entitled to trial, and could be punished only after conviction. They were massacred in cold blood.

4. They were not caught in piracy. There was nothing contraband of war found upon the vessel. She was sailing peacefully on the high seas, and her capture and invasion would be exactly paralleled if the commander and crew of the Spanish gunboat Arapiles, being repaired in a New York navy-yard, were to enter the City Hall of Brooklyn, carry off and slaughter the city officials and 43 citizens.

5. The Government cannot deal with the question as an optional one of chivalry or humanity. It is a question of law, as cold as blue steel; and the United States must so act upon it, or retire from the business of running a government.

6. The question is one of these two: (1), Spain captured a bona fide American vessel, and massacred 50 or more persons in her service; or (2), Spain arrogated to herself the right on the high seas to capture an American vessel on a suspicion, and, on a suspicion, massacred 50 or more persons entitled to the protection of the American flag.

Our Future Wealth.

That our country is eventually to take the lead of all the world in wealth, must be plain to any one who fairly estimates of her as yet undeveloped resources.

Since steam has been applied to commerce and manufactures, the productive coal fields of Great Britain have been her chief source of strength. These coal fields have been worked for a great number of years, and many of them show symptoms of exhaustion. They are, moreover, insignificant in extent, as compared with what this country possesses. The aggregate area of the coal fields of Great Britain and Ireland is, at most, but 12,000 square miles, while that of the United States is at least 196,000 square miles. The coal area of Canada, mostly in Nova Scotia, is put down at 18,000 square miles.

If the quantity of coal in each given square acre be about the same, then Nova Scotia is richer in coal than Great Britain ever was, and the United States is more than sixteen times as rich. In fact, according to elaborate estimates made by Prof. Rogers, the whole of Europe contains but one-twelfth the quantity of coal which exists in this country. The present available quantity in the British Islands is estimated at 190,000 millions of tons, while that of France and Belgium is set down at 95,000 millions.

These facts show—if coal be a synonym of wealth and power—that the United States will be rich and powerful when the great countries of Europe have passed into decadence, and the future New Zealander, sitting on a broken arch of London bridge, muses on the ruins of St. Paul.

Coal and iron get together. One is, as it were, a factor to the other; without iron, coal would lose a large portion of its value; without coal, iron ore would be comparatively worthless. Though unlike they are still nearly related in their range of uses. The iron engine is rendered serviceable through the power which coal supplies, and the iron horse and iron ship are propelled through the force which it develops.

In England, the production of iron—consequent upon the increasing difficulty and cost of producing coal—is every year becoming more and more expensive. Dear coal in England as well as in every other country, means dear iron, and with dear iron England cannot long maintain her present admitted pre-eminence in manufactures, and the support of a commercial marine.

The rich distribution of iron ores in close proximity to all our great coal measures is a prophetic indication of our future wealth. All history shows that wealth and population gravitate toward centers enriched by the valued presence of coal and iron. No other country is as well supplied as the United States in these twin agencies of wealth, power, and population, consequently no other country will be as wealthy, as populous, and as powerful.

Our largest coal field is that known as the "Great Appalachian." Passing through Western Virginia, Eastern Kentucky, and Eastern Tennessee, it terminates in Alabama, where it makes its nearest approach to gulf or ocean waters. As yet this great field is comparatively untouched; but it is now attracting attention, and several blast furnaces for the production of iron have already been established, not only on the line of the Chesapeake and Ohio railroad, but in Alabama, toward the field's most southern extremity.—New Orleans Times.

The Men Who Have Held the Chief-Justiceship.

[From the Washington Chronicle.]

The renewed interest manifested in the subject of the appointment of the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States has induced us to print in the form of a table, which will be found below, a complete list of all the Chief Justices which have heretofore been appointed, the State of their residence, and their age when appointed, by whom appointed, the periods of service, the dates of birth and death of each, and age at time of death.

From this table it will be seen that all of the Presidents who have heretofore been required to perform the responsible duty of selecting jurists for this exalted position, viz.: Washington, Adams, Jackson and Lincoln, have concurred in the selection of comparatively young men. No one of them had passed the meridian of a vigorous manhood at the date of appointment. The oldest, Roger B. Taney, was only 59 years old, Rutledge and Chase were 56, Marshall 46, and Jay and Ellsworth were but 44 each.

A circumstance without parallel in the military history of this country is recorded in Illinois. H. M. Wheeler, of Schuyler county, in that State, enlisted in the United States army under Gen. Lyon in 1861, was wounded, captured, and paroled, but by some strange oversight was never discharged from service until a few days ago, when the proper papers were made out, and his back pay and pension—amounting to near $4,000—were paid him.—New York Sun.

YUBA DAM.

[The following verses, says the Spirit of the Times, first published anonymously, have been generally accredited to Bret Harte, and we remember to have seen an English review of a pirated edition of Bret Harte—published, we believe, by John Camden Hotton—which called "Yuba Dam" the most characteristic of Mr. Harte's productions. Without pronouncing upon the question, we think it right to render unto Cæsar the things that are his. The verses were written by Col. Charles James, formerly Collector of San Francisco, and one of California's most cultivated and respected citizens. We print them from the author's MS.:]

The sun was shimmering all the west
And gilding all the yellow main,
And tumbling shadows from the crest
Of gilded mountains to the plain,
As laboring up a watercourse
A traveler pricked his weary horse;
When all at once upon his sight
Burst a fair village clean and bright.

He asked a miner whom he met
If he could give its name. "You bet."
"Pray do, my friend, and do not sham."
The miner answered, "Yuba dam."

"Kind, gentle friend, do not abuse
My ignorance; I cry a truce
To thy bold wit; come, tell me true,
I would not ask it if I knew,
But I, dear sir, a stranger am."
Quick roared the miner, "Yuba dam."

Disheartened, on the stranger pressed,
And overtook a mincing dame
With flaxen hair and silken vest,
And begged of her the village name.
She ope'd her sweet lips like a clam,
And simpered guilely, "Yuba dam."

On tore the stranger, nearly wild,
And came upon an artless child;
She had a satchel on the arm,
While o'er her face stole many a charm.

"Where have you been?" the stranger said;
The maid uplifted quick her head,
And answered, with the ready truth
And open frankness of her youth,
"At school." "Who keeps it?" "Uncle Sam."
"What is this place, sweet?" "Yuba dam."

"Alas!" he screamed, in frantic grief,
"Will no one come to my relief;
Will no one tell me where I am?"
The school-boys shouted, "Yuba dam;"
And on the bridge, as he did slam,
The planks re-echoed "Yuba dam."

"Perdition seize the place!" he cried,
As through its streets he swiftly hied;
Yet ere he went to rest that night,
From something told him by a wight
He found that he himself had shammed,
And that the "Yuba" had been dammed.

A Pennsylvania clergyman has made a hit by introducing "personals" in his prayers. For instance: "Lord have mercy on John Shanahan, who keeps a saloon near the old red bridge. Either lay him on a bed of sickness or have him removed from this town."

A schoolboy being requested to write a composition on the subject of "pins," produced the following: "Pins are very useful. They have saved the lives of a great many men, women and children—in fact whole families." "How so?" asked the puzzled teacher; and the boy replied, "Why, by not swallowing them." This matches the story of the other boy who defined salt as "the stuff that makes potatoes taste bad when you don't put any on."

The Truth at Last.

An amusing incident of childish humor used to be narrated by a Mr. Campbell, of Jura, the subject of it being his own son. It seems the boy was much spoiled by indulgence; in fact, the parents were scarcely able to refuse him anything he demanded. He was in the drawing-room on one occasion when dinner was announced, and on being ordered up-stairs to the nursery, he insisted on going down to dinner with the company. His mother at first refused, but the child persevered, and kept saying, "If ye dinna let me, I'll tell you." His father, then, for the sake of peace, allowed him to go into the dining-room. He sat at the table beside his mother, and when he found every one getting soup and himself omitted, he demanded soup and repeated, "If I dinna get some, I'll tell you." Well, soup was given, and various other things yielded to his importunities, to which he always added the usual threat of "telling you." At last, when it came to wine, his mother stood firm, and positively refused to let him have some. He then became more vociferous than ever about "telling you," and as he was still refused, he declared, "Now I'll tell you," and at last roared out, to the great amusement of all present, "My new breeks were made out o' the auld curtains!"

How the Emperor of Russia Has to Work For a Living.

When the yellow flag with the double-headed eagle of Russia in the center flies from the flag-staff of the Kremlin palace it announces to Moscow that Alexander, the emancipator, is in the ancient capital of his vast dominion. Constitutional sovereigns lie on a bed of roses compared to the autocrat of Russia. From him everything hinges in the country, that contains 8,000,000 of square miles; with him moves the entire machinery of state, and always on the move his majesty is obliged to be. Trained in the severe school of the Emperor Nicholas, Alexander II. never allows himself a moment's relaxation. It is known what a passionate soldier the Emperor of Germany is, how he will even attend the drills of a single company. The Emperor of Russia, though, goes from review to review, from field-days of 5,000 men to field-days of special arms, from the target practice of a few non-commissioned officers to a maneuver of the fleet. Now in Poland, now in Tsarsko Selo, now at Cronstadt, now in the Caucasus, and all at once in the Crimea. Always soldiers, soldiers, soldiers! He himself is never out of uniform, and none of the ministers ever discard their epaulets. The imperial suite is, of course, enormous. But to-day his majesty is at Moscow; to-night he proceeds to the Crimea. In the train the Minister of Interior will probably see him, with innumerable papers for signature; the Minister of Finance, of Justice, or of Foreign Affairs will disturb the imperial rest. Such is it to be an Emperor; and how many there are who would give a whole lifetime for five minutes in such a position! For five minutes it may be pleasant, but it is questionable whether a long experience would not bring about a change of feeling.—Army and Navy Gazette.

Cuba.

There has been almost a continuous insurrection in the island of Cuba ever since Joseph Bonaparte was made ruler of Spain, when the Cubans adhered to the Bourbon cause. Till the year 1837, Cuba followed the fortunnes of the mother country, enjoying constitutional liberty whenever Spain had it, and relapsing into despotism when Spain relapsed. Since that time, Cuba has had none of the privileges of the Home Government. For more than thirty years the island has been under the rule of martial law, the Captain-General having the same powers as those conferred on a Governor of a city in a state of siege. Four years ago, the Captain-General practically abdicated these powers to the volunteers, who have used them with a bloody cruelty unparalled in the history of civilized countries. Four years ago, Cespedes, an able lawyer and rich planter, raised the banner of insurrection, with 147 men about him, armed with knives and fowling-pieces. In three days, he had an army of 4,000 men, and in a month one of 9,000. To-day, he has an army of 20,000 men, fighting from pure patriotism and entrenched in fastnesses that are simply impregnable, with the active sympathy of 150,000 free Cubans, represented by a President and Legislature of their own election. Meanwhile Spain has sacrificed 100,000 lives that the rich and lovely island may be turned over to a pack of murderous outlaws, who defy at once the laws of Spain, the laws of nations, and the laws of humanity.

The Cost of War.

The last French budget, which was closed "under perfectly normal conditions," was that of 1869. That budget showed a surplus of about $16,000,000, while the budget of 1874, in spite of the vast number of new taxes, shows a deficit of $38,000,000. According to M. Magne, Minister of Finance, the expenditure of which the war was the direct or indirect cause amounted—taking into account the falling off in the tax receipts of 1870 and 1871—to $760,000,000. To this must be added the $1,000,000,000 of indemnity paid to Germany, making a total penalty for the mad cry "to Berlin!" of $1,760,000,000. This, it will be observed, is very little short of the gross increase of the principal of the public debt of the United States between 1861 and 1866.—New York Times.

The present navy of the United States is much stronger than is generally supposed. According to the Navy Register we have fifty-one ironclads, carrying 127 guns of large calibre. Spain has only nine ironclads and seven gunboats. We have five first-class wooden frigates; Spain has ten. Our navy is widely scattered, but it would not take so very long to bring the different squadrons home. The navy of the United States consists, all told, of 92 vessels. The utmost effort is being made to prepare these now in harbor for service. By the time Congress has decided upon a Spanish policy, we shall have a navy amply able to meet the immediate demands of the emergency.

The Duties of the Bank of England.—Four great duties are performed by the Bank of England. It has the custody of about £23,000,000 in gold coin and bullion; it manufactures and keeps in circulation about £38,000,000 in bank notes; it has the management of the national debt, now amounting to £740,000,000; and it serves as the collecting-house and center of distribution for the country's revenue and expenditure, being some £70,000,000 a year. Each duty involves an immensity of detail, and has to be fulfilled with a nicety that can hardly be conceived.

A Simple Croup Preventive.—Take a piece of black silk two or three inches wide, sew it around the child's neck, let him wear it constantly, changing it when it becomes much worn and thin. Our little one, who was always subject to croup, has never been troubled in that way since we used the silk, although many a night he has gone to his crib so hoarse he could hardly speak. Try it, mothers. It will certainly do no harm, if it does not do good. You had better have your little ones encased in black silk than see them suffering from that fell destroyer, croup.

Opinions of the Press.—The Texas New Yorker says: "An old Scotch physician once said to one of his patients: 'Keep your feet warm, your head cool, and your bowels open, an' there's little "ilse" can harm ye.' This aphorism is full of wisdom, and expresses exactly what Dr. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters will do for you. We speak of what we know from nearly two years' practical experience in the use of this indispensable family medicine. Its office is to attack a lazy, torpid liver, and impart new life to this vital organ—a proper flow of bile and a prompt discharge of effete matter. A good digestion and appetite are restored to the sufferer. Pure blood, the 'life of the flesh,' is secured, and the patient soon feels himself a walking electrical battery. Good health is more precious than fine gold—Vinegar Bitters restores it, and is, therefore, above price. The man who discovered it is a philosopher and a benefactor of his race." 18

Dr. J. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters are a purely Vegetable preparation, made chiefly from the native herbs found on the lower ranges of the Sierra Nevada mountains of California, the medicinal properties of which are extracted therefrom without the use of Alcohol. The question is almost daily asked, "What is the cause of the unparalleled success of Vinegar Bitters?" Our answer is, that they remove the cause of disease, and the patient recovers his health. They are the great blood purifier and a life-giving principle, a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the system. Never before in the history of the world has a medicine been compounded possessing the remarkable qualities of Vinegar Bitters in healing the sick of every disease man is heir to. They are a gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver and Visceral Organs, in Bilious Diseases.

The properties of Dr. Walker's Vinegar Bitters are Aperient, Diaphoretic, Carminative, Nutritious, Laxative, Diuretic, Sedative, Counter-Irritant, Sudorific, Alterative, and Anti-Bilious.

Grateful Thousands proclaim Vinegar Bitters the most wonderful Invigorant that ever sustained the sinking system.

No Person can take these Bitters according to directions, and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and vital organs wasted beyond repair.

Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, which are so prevalent in the valleys of our great rivers throughout the United States, especially those of the Mississippi, Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, Tennessee, Cumberland, Arkansas, Red, Colorado, Brazos, Rio Grande, Pearl, Alabama, Mobile, Savannah, Roanoke, James, and many others, with their vast tributaries, throughout our entire country during the Summer and Autumn, and remarkably so during seasons of unusual heat and dryness, are invariably accompanied by extensive derangements of the stomach and liver, and other abdominal viscera. In their treatment, a purgative, exerting a powerful influence upon these various organs, is essentially necessary. There is no cathartic for the purpose equal to Dr. J. Walker's Vinegar Bitters, as they will speedily remove the dark-colored viscid matter with which the bowels are loaded, at the same time stimulating the secretions of the liver, and generally restoring the healthy functions of the digestive organs.

Fortify the body against disease by purifying all its fluids with Vinegar Bitters. No epidemic can take hold of a system thus fore-armed.

Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the region of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia. One bottle will prove a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement.

Scrofula, or King's Evil, White Swellings, Ulcers, Erysipelas, Swelled Neck, Goitre, Scrofulous Inflammations, Indolent Inflammations, Mercurial Affections, Old Sores, Eruptions of the Skin, Sore Eyes, etc. In these, as in all other constitutional Diseases, Walker's Vinegar Bitters have shown their great curative powers in the most obstinate and intractable cases.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism, Gout, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have no equal. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood.

Mechanical Diseases.—Persons engaged in Paints and Minerals, such as Plumbers, Type-setters, Gold-beaters, and Miners, as they advance in life, are subject to paralysis of the Bowels. To guard against this, take a dose of Walker's Vinegar Bitters occasionally.

For Skin Diseases, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt-Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ring-worms, Scald-head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters.

Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. No system of medicine, no vermifuges, no anthelmintics will free the system from worms like these Bitters.

For Female Complaints, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood, or the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters display so decided an influence that improvement is soon perceptible.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions, or Sores: cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul; your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure, and the health of the system will follow.

WM. RESOR & CO., Cincinnati.

The Auburn Courier

Thursday Dec., 4, 1873.

The Revenue from customs has fallen off fifty per cent since the panic set in. Will the Government yet be compelled to issue "accepted checks?"

The high "cockalorum" of the Grangers in Ohio, on his travels instituting his Floras and Pamonas, sports a shining silk hat and close fitting kid gloves.

Mr. Allen is the first Democratic Governor entitled to rooms in the present State House since its completion in 1855. His Inaugural will be devoted to national affairs and will be a statesmanlike document and attract great attention.

The Scandinavim og America, a Scandinavian Repudlican paper published in Chicago, formally severs its connection with the Republican party, and refuses to be called a Repuolican paper any longer. The Republican party cannot any longer hold the Scandinavian vote in the Northwest.

The extension of Marshal McMahon's power for seven years in France, by a vote of the Assembly, may be considered as a formal ending of the pretended Republic. Long before that time is passed the monarchical Marshal will have put everything in trim for one of the old monarchs.

The New York Journal of Commerce, a commercial paper of Republican proclivities, gravely observes, "It appears to us that the Republican party, in obedience to the law which governs the rise, progress and decay of all mundane things, is now slowly traveling the downward path. It is an indisputable fact that the Republican party is weakening, explain it as one may."

A majority of the Republican papers of the country are constantly engaged in throwing out disgraceful flings at the Grangers. The Indianapolis Sun, in an article on the financial situation, says, "The simplest remedy for the evils that do now exist is to be economical, and let the Grangers run their race as quickly as possible, so that business may settle down upon a substantial basis."

The Staats Zeitung, the leading German Republican paper in Chicago, has bidden farewell to the Republican party It says, "Herewith the account is closed. Had there still remained a tie between ourselves and the English speaking Republicans of Chicago, the late city election would have sundered it." The Germans all over the country who have been Republicans are now quitting that shaky organization.

Bill Tweed has finally been dealt with as he deserves in New York, now let the work still go on, and such men as Boss Shepherd, of Washington City, and Kemble, of Philadelphia, be made to fear the law. Let our Radical friends say a word about thieves that have infested their ranks, and let them be as persistent as the Democrats were in the punishment of Tweed.

The first grand meeting of the Grangers in this State has just closed at Valparaiso. Within the twelve months the organization has grown so —from less than half a hundred to nearly seven hundred—that the State could scarcely recognize itself. The Indiana Grangers are a temperate and well balanced society, having somewhat less to encounter than States further west; they are more careful and discreet in their action. The late convention has given the Order a great impulse, especially by acquainting the new membership with the system and with each other.

At a meeting of the Democratic State Central Committee, held in pursuance of a call of the Chairman, the following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted.

Whereas, It is deemed inexpedient to hold a Democratic State Convention sooner than next Spring, or the early part of Summer, therefore,

Resolved, That the Chairman be requested to call this committee together some time during the month of March next, for the purpose of fixing the time for holding a Democratic State Convention.

Thereupon the committee adjourned.

E. S. Alvord, Chairman.

Indianapolis, Nov. 28, 1873

It was Oliver P. Morton, you remember, who said jauntily, in that speech, which gave the organs such exquisite satisfaction—that—"The financial administration of the Republican party has given to the country stability and confidence. Under its rule, the business men of the nation count with confidence upon the years to come and know what they may reasonably look for, and enterprise leaps forward as it never did before." And it is Secretary Richardson who now says that the recent decrease in customs and internal revenue receipts are so great that he expects, within three months, to see the United States borrowing money to pay its current expenses and the interest on the public debt.

Thurman-Morton.

The Brooklyn Argus of recent date contained the following parallel between Senators Thurman and Morton:

"Senator Thurman is unsurpassed in the art of electioneering. He is the most consumate political tactician of this time. Allen's election is more due to Thurman's efforts than to his own popularity. Senator Morton is the only man in the Republican party who can be matched with the famous Buckeye. But Morton is unscrupulous He descends to strategems that Thurman's superior cleverness enables him to do without. Morton is the most venturesome, Thurman is the most adroit. Morton has little conscience; Thurman has a good deal. Morton is sometimes clumsy; Thurman is always comme il faut. Morton would crucify his grandmother to carry his point; Thurman might take your scalp, but you wouldn't know it."

Spanish Barbarity.

The person who can read the following, and then apologize for Spain in the Virginius affair, does not exhibit much friendship for civilization.

These executions always take place in the slaughter house, about three-fourths of a mile distant. It was here that the Virginius victims ended their lives. From the prison near the center of the city, the Calle del Theatro makes a somewhat sudden curve. On the morning of the execution, the battallion of volunteers are summoned at an early hour from the barracks, and proceeded to the prison. The prisoners are led forth, bound, and the solemn procession then takes up its death march. In the van are the musicians, whose only instruments are drums, which are beat with a low, ominous sound and measured regularity. The street leads out of the city toward the west, past the Hotel Theatro, the office of the United States Consul, and further on, the office of the British Consul. Out into the suburbs runs the broad unshaded street, and on an eminence which may be seen from every portion of the city, stands the building where the victims die. It is a low, white-washed structure of forbidding aspect—an adobe house with a steep roof, which projects far beyond its walls on either side. Around the building is a trench, into which the waters from the roof fall. It is about two feet deep. On the upper side of this building the procession halts, and forms a hollow square, with the prisoners in the center. The side next the slaughter house is opened, and the victims are led so the border of the trench. Here they are bound hand and foot, though their eyes are left uncovered. They are then required to kneel along the trench, with faces turned toward the wall. In the midst of the hollow square stand the Colonel and the priests. The duties of the spiritual advisors being at length performed, they retire with the Colonel, and at a signal from the latter the whole company fires. The unfortunate victims fall forward into the trench, some dead, some dying, and others only slightly wounded. The artillery force, who have been stationed in the background, now advance and drive their clumsy carriages over the victims. Several times is this part of the ceremony repeated, and it is by that time supposed that all are dead. The dead wagons are then heaped with corpses, among which is sometimes seen a still quivering body. A half mile away they are buried, and the soldiery disperse to to their barracks.

The slaughter house is scarred and battered with bullets on its northern side. Here are inhumanly slaughtered persons of all ages and both sexes. The Spaniards show no mercy to gray haired patriarchs, to women or to children. Three years ago a little girl four years of age was led forth to her death. The offence was a refusal to made known her father's hiding place. The days of execution are gala days in the city. Hunereds of men, women and children pour forth from its streets and press forward in the throng. As the victims fall dying in the trenches these crowds push madly forward to view the bleeding bodies, the military give way for a moment, and not until that moment arrives are the appetites of the bloodthirsty spectators sated.

OFFICIAL PAPER of the COUNTY

Local and Miscellaneous.

An Appeal to Our Friends.

We are compelled to call upon those indebted to the COURIER for a prompt payment of what they owe us. We say to our friends everywhere we need money. We need what is due us. We must have money, in order to carry on our business, or we will be compelled to follow in the wake of others, and suspend until better times. But we have confidence in the tried honesty and true patronism of the people of DeKalb County, and believe that they will cheerfully remit the amount and thus enable us to meet promptly every demand against us. Do this and we will cheer your homes and make glad your hearts by improving the COURIER, the best family newspaper published in the State.

Court next week.

Our town wants a night police.

Sun sets at 4 o'clock, 43 minutes.

Take the COURIER—commence now

The weather continues bad and sloppy.

Our mechants report business very dull.

Send in the report of your heavy pork ers.

Fort Wayne is making it lively for gamblers.

Dinner time proves how empty the world is.

Candy-pulls and spelling-schools will soon be in order.

The wheat crop, for this time of the year, looks good.

Corn and buckwheat-cakes are now in great demand.

See if your name is in the Roll of Honor this week.

Nothing is so reasonable and cheap as good manners.

Read Beard's prices in another column. Everything reduced.

The roads are in a pretty good condition for to ride a horse back.

Another excursion on the Eel River Railroad last Tuesday.

Totten is fiting up a nice store in John Hebel's building.

There come pretty near being a prize fight the other day.

Remember Vodermark & Sons when you want cheap shoes.

Remember the grand exhibition of Toys at the Jewelry Store.

Last Sunday was a disagreeable day, although the churches were well filled.

Quite a number of our citizens are burning coal this winter instead of wood.

Toys for everybody at Abright & Shepherd's

Navy blue is an immence popular color with the ladies for dress goods this winter.

The old reliable club gives another hop to-night. Let there be a good attendance.

Rev. J. Emory Fisher will be at his post again next Sunday, nothing preventing.

The gentle Swineford, him of the match like form, at our new hotel, is off on a visit to Ohio.

Miss McNarry, of Upper Sandusky, Ohio is one of the teachers in the public school this winter.

The new Saw Mill, near the Eagle Mills, is going up rapidly, and, the weather permitting, will be in operation in a few weeks.

Auburn has a married lady going to school. Well, why not? We like the style, and perhaps there are a few more who would be benefitted thereby.

An excursion train containing the Council and business men of Logansport passed throug hour place last Tuesday on their way to return the visit made by Toledo the other week.

LOST.—On Sunday last, between the residence of A. J. Little and the Baptist church, a square breast-pin with a figured set. A reward will be given by leaving it at this office.

Something pretty in the show windows of the jewelry store, and more of the same kind on the inside.

WOOD!

Bring on your wood. We want those who have promised us wood to bring it along as soon as possible, or we will be left in the cold.

T. B. Totten has opened out an extensive stock of Hats and Caps and Notions in Hebel's corner, and is now ready for business. Look in and examine his large stock.

A splendid lot of candies have just been opened out for the holidays at Muller & Casebeer's. The children will have them, you know, and there's the place to go, you know, as everybody says so.

Capt. J. R. Wallace, of Wabash, Ind., dealer in cigars, etc., gave us a short stay on yesterday. This firm has a wide reputation for keeping good goods, and Mr. W. will do a large trade among our merchants.

Prof. Bennett, our popular music teacher, met with quite a painful accident the other evening, while in the act of drawing water from a cistern. It seems as though his foothold gave way, caused by ice and snow, and he fell across the boxing breaking two ribs.

Go before the rush commences and secure your toys for the holidays at Abright & Shepherd's.

OLD FOLKS' HOP.—The old folks are making preparations for their second annual Hop, which will take place about the 6th of January next. Their first hop was a grand success, in its appointments and arrangements, and this promises to be even better.

Peter's Musical Monthly for December is at hand, and is complete as usual, with choice music. Songs and Instrumental pieces. People wishing to subscribe for a musical paper for the coming year could not do better than to send $3 to J. L. Peters, 599 Broadway, N. Y.

Messrs. Cannon & Steel, our popular painters, have executed a most beatiful sign for E. Vordermark & Sons, which was placed in position last Saturday. It shows an artistic touch and skill rarely equaled, while the design is new and tasty The wood-work was done by Mr. Baldock and is one of the features of the sign.

The Detroit, Eel River and Illinois Railroad Company, we are advised, will put on early in the spring a local accommodation passenger train, which will make the round trip, in one day, from North Manchester to Toledo and return, giving five hours for the transaction of business in the former place.—Col. City Post.

LOST.—At No. 1 School House, Butler township, or between that point and Waterloo, Nov. 29th or 30th, a pocket-book containing about $25 in U. S. currency, and a note of hand for $800 given by Bussett & Kester to undersigned. A liberal reward will be given for its return.

CHAS. R. REED,
Waterloo, Ind.

Baxter, not him of the temperance notoriety, but him who stands on the side of whisky, says that we "take a drink with the boys." And yet he after seeing our danger goes wilfully and assists in perpetrating a system that seeks our ruin. Oh, Charles, How oft would we have gathered you under our wings as a hen, but you would not.

A farmer advises his brother farmers especially those who are in debt, to sell their surplus products at once and pay their debts. He thinks too many of them are holding their produce, thinking they must "operate," when they should convert it into money, pay their debts, and thus contribute something to the general good by aiding in the circulation of currency.

The usual placidity of our twenty-five dollar neighbor was somewhat ruffled last week over our little item, courtesly asking him to come over into Macedonia and help us out on signing licenses for liquor permits. Don't worry, neighbor—bless your heart—you need not come if you don't want to, it was a mere matter of taste, you know, on our part.

Now, when it snows, and freezes, and blows, take care of your nose, and wrap up your toes in warm woolen hose, and wear winter clothes, which, we suppose, you can buy at Lanferty's cheaper than any where else. Drop in at his store and see how it is youself. As Mr. Lauferty has engaged a first-class cutter you can get a suit made to order in the latest style Large assortment of piece goods to select from.

Nothing gives us greater pleasure than to record the progress and prosperity of our school. Last week closed its first term under the present efficient Superintendent, Mr. A. R. Hoffman. It has thus far surpassed the fondest anticipations of all interested; so far as we have been able to learn, universal satisfaction has been given. A very good indication of this is the fact that about fifty of those in attendance expect to remain during this term. The few who leave the school will teach during the winter and return in the spring. Ample preparations are being made in order that all who desire to attend during the winter term may be accommodated. The rooms and building will be in complete repair. It is expected that this will be a very successful term.—Students are coming from all quarters.

Examination of Teachers.

Examinations will be held at Auburn, on the first Saturday in each month until further notice.

JAMES A. BARNS, Co. Supt.

Have you visited the New Boot & Shoe Store of E. Vordermark & Sons, in the Odd Fellows building? If not, you have missed a rare treat and you should go at once and examine their large and well selected stock, which they are offering at greatly reduced prices for these hard times. Recollect this a branch house of their large wholesale at Fort Wayne.—This is the largest house in the State and all of their goods are sold at Ft. Wayne prices. Remember the place, sign of the Big Shoe.

The editor of the Courier is informed that the effort to procure permits here is strengthened by a desire for his accommodation.—Press.

And is it the aim of our neighbor to contribute aid for our overthrow and destruction, so that we may be got out of the way. How sad. If so we advise that the scheme be abandoned, as it will prove fruitless. We are firm as a rock, and all such efforts will have about as much effect, as those $25 did in getting Tously the nomination for Congress.

WEDDING RECEPTION.—On last Tuesday evening the members and congregation of the Presbyterian church gave a wedding reception to their popular, young minister J. Emory Fisher. The party met at the residence of S. W. Ralston and spent part of the evening in congratulating the bride and groom. At the usual hour they proceeded to the Weaver House where all partook of a grand and sumptuous supper Although the evening was a wet, disagreeable one a large crowd were in attendance, and all enjoyed themselves tiptop.

Now is the winter of our discontent made glorious by the new Boot & Shoe store of E. Vordermark & Sons. Let the people in general rejoice that we have a firm of that kind in our city. No need of going to Ft Wayne to buy your Boots and Shoes when you can get them at home just as cheap, if not a little cheaper. Try them and you will find them agreeable gentlemen to deal with, on whose word you can rely. For the holidays they have a stock of fine Boots, Shoes & Slippers in endless varieties. Their cash prices defy competion. Remember the place, sign of the Big Shoe.

EDITOR COURIER—Dear Sir: Will you please announce to the people of Auburn and vicinity through your paper that by order of C. C. Reed, Esq., Supt. Telegraph at Kalamazoo, Mich., that from this date the Western Union Telegraph office at Eel River depot, in Auburn, will be open for commercial telegraphing. Persons wishing to do business of this kind can be accommodated, as we are now prepared to forward messages to any and all points in America, and at low rates; so that all can do business of this kind without very heavy expense.

Yours, truly,
E. S. SHANE,
Manager and Operator.

The Press gives our speech, delivered at Logansport, a few days ago, in full, for which we are thankful. We did not deem it of sufficient importance for the COURIER and therefore conclude that it was just the thing for the Press. But you can't flatter us, neighbor, by publishing our speeches, that you may draw our attention from the fact of your signing petitions for the sale of liquor. Should your boys grow up and resist the great temptation, you ought to be thankful, but should they fall and be cursed with this great tempter they will, no doubt, look back over the record of their father and bless him that he had the foresight to put this blessing within their reach. No matter about our speeches. Attend to the matter in question.

It has been said that city weeklies are cheaper and better than the county papers because they give more colums of reading for the money. Do the city papers, it asks, ever give you any news?—Never. Do they say anything in regard to your own county? Do they say anything about local matters which your paper publishes without delay? Not an item. And yet there men who take such contracted views of this matter. that, unless they are getting as many square inches of reading matter in their own paper as they do in city papers they think they are not getting the worth of their money. The COURIER contains nearly as much reading matter as most of the city papers and we hope that our friends in the county. instead of exerting themselves to get up clubs for foreign papers, will do something for their county paper.

WONDERFUL CURES!

The People of Fort Wayne and Vicinity Perfectly Wild.

Everybody is excited at the wonderful success of Dr. S. Clay Todd, No. 4, East Columbia street, Fort Wayne, Ind, who is curing Consumption, a decease always before thought incurable. Also Catarrh, Sore Throat, Coughs, Night-sweats, Bronchitis, White Swellings, Fever Sores, Liver Kidney and Spinal Diseases, Epileptic Fits, Nervous Debility and all diseases of the Urinary Organs, Eye and Ear, including diseases of women and children heretofore considered incurable.

ROLL OF HONOR.

The following enterprising, wide-a-wake subscribers to the COURIER have paid us the amount opposite their names. Read them, fellow traveler, read them. It may do you good. And you that are in arrears look to it that your name may appear in the next list. Those that expect to swindle us will be glad to know that there are a few honest men in the county.

It is retailers who must make the grand onslaught upon the present pernicious system of long credit, and it pears to us that the proper way to do it is to make such a marked difference between the cash and credit prices of goods that no customer who has the means for paying for a necessary purchase will do well to have it "charged." We are well aware that "great inducements for cash" are frequently advertised and sometimes given; but as a rule the farmer or other customer who is known to be perfectly safe, is charged no more at the end of the year for goods purchased at the beginning than he who pays when he buys; and the well known result of this is that hundreds of farmers who could easily pay cash for everything, systematically put their funds out at interest, or buy "more land" after the produce of their farms is disposed of, and then have all the dry goods, groceries and other articles they need booked until after the following harvest. But let them once be thoroughly convinced that they can save as much on their purchases as they can make by letting their money out at interest, and the merchants and mechanics would soon cease to complain of long credit. If every article had two prices—a cash price and a credit price—or if some uniform reduction were made, without being asked, to cash customers, we fancy that there would be no necessity for tempting to render payment on the spot compulsory, or to refuse a short credit to those who might be so circumstanced as to need it and who were willing to pay for the accommodation." We have strong hopes that our merchants will take up this matter, and endeavor to put business on a cash basis. A little consideration will convince both seller and buyer that it would be mutally advantageous to make a change in the present mode of doing business.

It is quite possible that Ryan and his friends on the Virginius were "filibusters," but there is an opinion in this country that a filibuster, engaged in lending a helping hand to people who are trying to throw off tyranny, is about as good and quite as respectable as a Spanish barbarian.

NEWS SUMMARY.

The East.

The Eureka and Boatmen's Insurance Companies of Pittsburgh lose $150,000 by the "irregularities" of Robert Finney, agent and secretary of the institutions.

William M. Tweed, the champion New York thief, goes to Blackwell's Island for twelve years. This is a prison, or a kind of penitentiary, to which the lowest and meanest criminals are sent. In addition, he was sentenced to pay a fine of $12,750....The first official bank report in New York city since Sept. 20 was made on the 22d of November, and shows a decrease of $30,000,000 in deposits, $30,000,000 in loans, and $3,4000,000 in legal tenders.

Messrs. James R. Osgood & Co., the eminent Boston publishers, have retired from the publishing business, and the Atlantic Monthly and Every Saturday will hereafter be issued from New York by Hurd & Houghton. Our Young Folks has been purchased by Scribner & Co., and will be merged into St. Nicholas, their new juvenile magazine.

Ingersoll, Farrington and Senator Genet, confederates of Boss Tweed in his gigantic robberies, have been arrested at New York, and will be tried for their crimes.

Several million bushels of grain are frozen up in the Erie canal, with no hopes of getting the boats through this season.

The city of Pittsburgh loses about $600,000 by the failure of the Union Trust Company.

The West.

Over 1,000,000 hogs have been received at the Chicago stock yards since Sept. 1....The first prize in the billiard tournament at Chicago was captured by Mons. Garnier, the second and third by Mons. Ubassy and Mons. Cyrille Dion respectively. A decided French victory.

Northern California and Oregon experienced a severe earthquake shock on Nov. 22....The small-pox is making such fearful ravages in Cleveland that the Board of Health has been compelled to adopt special precautions to prevent its spread.

Hon. James R. Loomis, a member of the Illinois Legislature from Gallatin county, was recently ejected from a train on the Chicago and Alton railroad, for refusing to pay his fare. Mr. Loomis tendered his legislative pass, but it was refused by the conductor. Suit for heavy damages is to be brought against the company by the honorable member.

Walter Grayson, a cattle-dealer from the Creek Nation, was recently robbed, in Kansas City, of $30,000.

George Coleman, of La Salle, Ill., the other day killed a wild turkey of the extraordinary weight of 23 pounds.

Washington.

W. J. Wilson, Cashier of the Freedman's man's Savings Bank, is "irregular" in his accounts to the extent of some $100,000. Mr. Wilson is a mulatto....The Treasury Department has unraveled the case of the Virginius, and declares that she was an American vessel, that her registry was regular, and that she violated no international law....Twenty of the best naval vessels will be ready for sea in a month....The Secretary of the Interior has affirmed the decision of the Commissioner of the General Land Office that no more than one-quarter section can be entered by one individual under the action of March 3, 1873, to encourage the growth of timber. The Secretary also affirmed the decision of Commissioner Drummond requiring parties to pay a fee of $10 for additional entry under the Soldiers' Homestead act of March 2, 1873, and requiring parties making such additional entry to appear in person at the local office, and make the necessary application and affidavit....Some interesting facts concerning the production of tobacco and spirits in this country in the fiscal year 1873 are given in the report of the Internal Revenue Commissioner. In all the forms of manufacture taxes were paid on 116,450,934 pounds of tobacco, and on 1,807,134,646 cigars, cheroots, etc. In the same year there were made 68,236,567 gallons of spirits from other materials than fruit, and fruits 2,914,800 gallons. The revenue receipts for the year have been $114,075,456.

The Minister of the Colonies reports from Havana that the restoration of embargoed property of American citizens is being diligently proceeded with....A Washington dispatch of the 24th says: "The Spanish question is everywhere discussed with more calmness than last week, and the impression seems to prevail, to a greater extent than heretofore, that there will be no war between the United States and Spain. The tone of the Spanish Ministry continues friendly, and a disposition is manifested to act in all matters in controversy in such a way as will preserve peace between the two nations." Another dispatch of the same date says: "The Secretary of War has been making preparations in a quiet but energetic way, getting the arsenals in shape for active service and completely arming our fortifications for coast defenses. It is announced that the Ordnance Department is prepared on very short notice to fully equip any army that a war with Spain might make necessary with breech-loaders, artillery of all sorts, and ammunition in abundance. Secretary Richardson has taken occasion again to assure the country that the Treasury Department will be found ready when called upon to furnish money to carry on a war."

The Patent Office last week issued a patent to ex-President Johnson for a combination plane.

President Grant, in an interview the other day with a prominent Western Congressman, spoke most freely and unreservedly on the subject of the Spanish complication. He regretted exceedingly that he was hampered by the act of 1868, passed for the purpose of tying the hands of Andrew Johnson, and nothing but the law in question prevented him from taking prompt action and demanding the amplest reparation. The President expressed himself in favor of free Cuba and ultimate annexation....The Secretary of the Treasury announces that hereafter silver coin will be paid only for the fractional parts of a dollar, instead of in sums not exceeding $5.

A Washington dispatch of Nov. 25 says: "The Administration, notwithstanding Secretary Fish's assurances to the contrary, regards the crisis as a perilous one, the issue of which is as probably war as peace. Even Secretary Fish is beginning to display something of a war-like spirit, and utterly scouts the suggestion of submitting the question to arbitration."

Foreign.

Thomas Baring, senior partner and founder of the house of Baring Bros., died in London on the 19th inst....Consul-General Hall telegraphs from Havana that the exact number of the Virginius passengers who were killed was 53, the 57 additional executions which were reported never having taken place....A letter from Havana says people are being imprisoned there daily, and none are allowed a hearing. There is a reign of terror, and Americans dare not pass through the streets for fear of arrest....It is officially announced that the effective Spanish force in Cuba numbers 54,000 men....Immediately after the adjournment of the French Assembly, on the 20th inst., the members of the Cabinet tendered their resignations, but President MacMahon refused to accept them, and begged them to retain their offices until the new Cabinet is formed.

Twenty-five miners were recently killed by a colliery explosion at Wigan, England....Jules Favre testified in the Bazaine trial a few days ago. He gave an account of his interview with Bismarck, and declared that the latter told him that he had reason to believe that Marshal Bazaine would not recognize the Government of September. The statement caused a profound sensation in the court room.

A conspiracy to surrender Cartagena to the Spanish Republican troops has been discovered, and several insurgent officers are arrested and will probably be shot....An immense mass meeting in favor of home rule for Ireland, in which over 60,000 people participated, was held in Dublin on the 23d of November....Disraeli, in a recent speech at Glasgow, severely criticized the Government, and predicted a great struggle in Europe between the spiritual and temporal powers....Several Generals who were engaged in the late revolutionary movement in San Domingo have been shot by order of President Baez....Sixteen of the Virginius victims were British subjects. Both the British Commodore and Consul at Jamaica telegraphed to Burriel at Santiago protesting against their execution in such haste....The members of the French Cabinet have decided not to resign....A Madrid dispatch of Nov. 23 denies the reports that violence had been offered to Minister Sickles. The idea of submitting the case of the Virginius to arbitration is much talked of at Madrid. Should this course be agreed to, the German Emperor is indicated as the probable arbitrator.

Bavaria follows speedily in the footsteps of Prussia in the adoption of a policy of antagonism to Rome. A cable dispatch states that the King has signed a decree abrogating the concordat with the Pope....Minister Sickles has authorized a denial of the reports that he had a stormy interview with the Spanish Foreign Minister. His relations with the members of the Spanish Government are unchanged. He pronounces equally untrue the report that he had expressed the opinion that war is inevitable, and says he has uttered no opinion as to the result of the pending questions. The Spanish press complains bitterly of these false reports.

News comes from Madrid that the Spaniards will not accept arbitration.

Political.

The official majority for Taylor, the Governor-elect of Wisconsin, is 15,411.

General.

A great falling off in railroad building in the United States appears in the figures presented in the annual report of the Iron and Steel Association. The number of miles of new track laid in 1873 was 3,000, a decrease of 50 per cent. in one year. In 1870, when the highest point was reached, 7,779 miles were laid.

Over 4,000,000 bushels of wheat are frozen up in the Erie canal....A New York dispatch of the 21st says: A Cuban gentleman living and doing business in this city, who arrived from Cuba yesterday, declared the statement that more than 100 of the crew of the Virginius were executed was true, as he saw it so stated by Spanish official reports in Havana.

One hundred and ninety more miles of the Northern Pacific road have been examined and accepted by the Government Commissioners. This makes in all 400 miles which have been accepted and on which patents for land-grants will be issued....Work was continued in all the navy yards of the United States on Sunday last.

A Washington dispatch says the Spanish objections to the demands of the United States Government are as follows:

First—That the Virginius is not an American ship, as she was owned by the Cubans and registered in the name of one Patterson, residing in New York.

Second—She has forfeited even the false registry by subsequent sale to other parties.

Third—She has frequently sailed during the past two years under flags of other countries.

Fourth—That Gen. Ryan was not a citizen of the United States.

Fifth—That the Virginius, at the time of her departure, was engaged in an unlawful expedition against a friendly power.

The cable steamer Robert A. Lowe was recently wrecked off the coast of Nova Scotia. Eighteen lives were lost....It is now asserted that Gen. Ryan had made a contract with the Cuban insurgents by which he was to receive $20,000 for landing the Virginius cargo and passengers in Cuba.

THE VIRGINIUS.

Account of an Eye-Witness of the Chase and Execution.

A Kingston (Jamaica) dispatch says: Capt. McArthur, of the British schooner Brilliant, reports that just before the Virginius was captured, Varona advised the firing of the powder magazine, and consequent blowing up of the vessel rather than than they should fall into the hands of the Spaniards, but the Captain persuaded and convinced Gen. Varona that being under the American flag, and in neutral waters, they would not dare touch a man on board. Varona and his followers thereupon became satisfied, and shortly after an officer from the Tornado boarded the Virginius and demanded her papers. The officer, after inspection, stated that they were correct, but made all on board prisoners. Varana replied that he was a prisoner because there was not an English or American man-of-war near to witness this scandal on the laws of nations. He added that he could have blown up the vessel, with all on board, but he had not done so since her papers were correct, and she had not been seized in Cuban waters. The American flag was, he considered, their protection, and he surrendered, he said, under the protection of that flag, but believed he would be a victim, since the Spanish Government had all along hated him.

Capt. McArthur witnessed the execution of Ryan, Varona, Jesus del Sol and Pedro Cespedes, and gives the following account: The Spaniards forced Cespedes and Jesus del Sol to kneel, in which position they were shot in the back. The soldiers next directed Ryan and Varona to kneel in the same way, but they refused, and were seized, thrown down, and handcuffed. All the time the two victims begged their tormentors to allow them to die standing, and, having offered further resistance, they were shot standing.

Fifteen officers of the Spanish army, who had been made prisoners on the battlefield by Varona, were present when he landed, and went to the Governor of the city and begged that his life might be spared, since he had given them theirs.

The Acting American Consul, on hearing that Ryan was to be shot, waited on the Governor and demanded his restoration as an American citizen, but the Governor refused to listen, on the ground that the Consul was not well-informed in regard to the matter. The Spaniards informed the Consul that they were acting on their own responsibility, and did not even intend communicating with Madrid.

Sangamon county, Ill., has had but two county clerks in over fifty years, and they were father and son, the former going into office in 1821, the latter in 1831. The latter was a candidate for re-election this year, but was defeated.—Peoria Transcript.

CAPTAIN JACK'S BODY.

A Horrible Rumor that it Has Been Pickled and Forwarded to Scientific Ghouls at Washington.

[From the Roseburg (Oregon) Plaindealer, Nov. 7.]

Last Sunday several teams loaded with Government stores from Fort Klamath arrived in this city and unloaded at the depot of the Oregon and California railway. Shortly after one of the teamsters, an acquaintance of ours, came to the office and privately asked us to repair to the depot with him, which we proceeded to do. When we arrived there he pointed to a cask, which, on close inspection, proved to be nothing more than a common whisky barrel, marked "Society of Natural History, Washington, D. C." We then wanted to know what was the meaning of this, when our friend informed us that the barrel contained nothing less than the body of the Modoc chief, preserved in spirits, and was being shipped through this way, ostensibly as Government stores, to prevent comment by newspapers and the public in general. Our informant then proceeded to give the whole story, as he was present at the execution and had remained at Fort Klamath from the time the Indians were hung until he left for Roseburg with his team and horrible freight. It appears that Jack's body was never buried after the head was severed from the trunk; in fact, if it had not been for the superstitious fears of the Indians concerning their dead relatives, which cause them to to very often risk their lives in time of war to carry their slain from the field of battle, and apprehensions entertained as to how it would be received by the public mind, the body would never have been buried. As it was, the Modoc chief only rested in his grave about ten or twelve hours. It was dug up before midnight on the day he was hung, by soldiers detailed for that purpose, who filled up the grave and left it as though it had never been disturbed. The body was immediately carried to the fort, and the head taken off and put up for shipment East. A few days after this the remainder of the body was placed in the barrel, as already stated, and started for the same city for which the head was intended.

Startling from Madrid.

Washington, Nov. 25.—Hon. William M. Evarts telegraphs here from New York the following important dispatch:

"I have received to-day a private dispatch, written in cipher, from Madrid, which is so startling in its character that I communicate it at once. The republic of Spain, or rather the form of a republic under Castelar, is to be overthrown by a combination of ruling Spaniards too strong for him to resist. The plan includes the establishment of Marshal Serrano as regent for the young Duke Alfonso, who, at a certain time, is to be proclaimed King, his queen mother, Isabella, abdicating her claims to the throne in his favor. The quick succession of events in Spain have proved the inefficiency of Castelar and the Government he assumes to control to cope with the disaffection in his Cabinet, insubordination in the army, and the struggle of the Carlist forces. In addition to this, the power of the priesthood has been secretly and most powerfully at work undermining the strength of republicanism in Spain, and the hereditary oligarchy of that nation has united its strength with the church to bring about this result. It is also undoubtedly true that the coming of Castelar toward a pacific solution of the United States-Cuban difficulties has precipitated the overthrow of the republic, and the reestablishment of the Bourbon dynasty. What I have giv n above is the substance of this important dispatch, and conveys to Washington the first news of a national movement which cannot fail of results that will complicate our diplomatic retations with the Government of Spain."

A Lively Cherokee Council.

We learn from Andrew Young, a Cherokee just from Tahlequah, that on Tuesday last a discussion arose about the Ockmulgee Constitution, and the apportioning of land in severalty among the Cherokees. Sam Osage, a councillor and a full-blood Indian, opposed the movement. He was considered a leader in the party opposed to what is termed the Boudinot policy. Turn Foreman was in the council-house when the discussion was going on and took part in it, and pulled out his pistol and shot Sam Osage dead. Immediately after, some unknown person shot Foreman, who died that night.

There is another version of the above affair, we learn from Col. Cravens, who is just down from Fort Gibson. It appears it was a made-up affair between Sam Osage and Colson to kill Foreman. While Foreman and Osage were talking friendly, Colson shot him, and then Osage turned upon him and shot Foreman, who then pulled his pistol out and killed Osage and also shot Colson.

Turn Foreman, just before he died, counted sixty-four men he had killed during his lifetime. The junior of this paper was well acquainted with him, and knows of many bloody deeds he committed. Foreman was between 30 and 34 years of age, a handsome-looking man, and very pleasant in conversation; but when once aroused, was quickly touched with bloodthirsty motives, and always brought down his antagonist.—Fort Smith (Ark.) Independent.

The Case of Udderzook.

Udderzook has been found guilty of murder in the first degree, at West Chester, Pa. After the rumors concerning the probable disagreement of the jury, this verdict comes like a surprise. The evidence was wholly circumstancial; but it was cumulative, and left but little doubt of the guilt of the accused in the minds of those who followed the details of this singular case. The theory of the prosecution was that Udderzook and Goss, brothers-in-law, entered into a conspiracy to defraud certain insurance offices of $25,000, that being the gross amount of policies on Goss's life. Goss's laboratory, prepared for the occasion, was burned down, and a body, charred beyond satisfactory recognition, was found in the ruins. The insurance companies, suspecting fraud, discovered that Goss was alive and in hiding. While they were on his trail, a horrible murder was discovered near Jennersville, Pa., and Udderzook was arrested for the crime. Investigation seems to have proved that the murdered man was Goss, who had been done to death by Udderzook in order that the original conspiracy, by which he was to gain some part of the insurance, might be carried. The body in the burned laboratory at Pentonville, was probably procured from a graveyard. The record of the jury's struggles will not tend to strengthen popular confidence in trial by jury. There were twelve ballots in all; and though there was a unanimous vote at last, there was one stage in the proceedings when the jury stood four for conviction and eight for acquittal. Taken altogether, it is one of the most singular criminal trials of recent times.—New York Tribune.

A Japanese Execution.

We have been favored by a correspondent with the following account of a Japanese execution: "I went to see an execution at Yeddo, out of a vile curiosity. I repented of it, but still it was a most extraordinary spectacle, and impressed me very much. The culprits were eight in number, one being a woman. They were all beheaded with a sword. The operation was performed with wonderful dexterity and coolness, and not one of them, even the woman, showed the slightest symptom of fear. There was a space of ground roped off; inside were three holes dug in the ground, with a little mound behind each, on which was spread a mat for the criminal to kneel on. On one side of the inclosure were two Japanese officials, in chairs, to see the thing properly conducted. I had a place directly in front of the mounds, at about six feet distance. The criminals were placed in a row, on one side of the inclosure, blindfolded with pieces of paper (they use paper for everything there). What struck me most was the horrid coolness of the executioner's assistant, a good-looking lad of about 18; he went up to each poor wretch in his turn, gave him a tap on the shoulder, led him up to the mound, and made him kneel on the mat; he then stripped his shoulders, made him stretch out his neck, said 'That will do,' and in a flash the man's head was in the hole in front of him, and his bleeding neck was, as it were, staring me in the face. The assistant, still with the same pleasant smile, picked the head up, threw some water over the face to wash off the blood and mud, and presented it to the Japanese officials, who nodded and signed to go on with the next. The assistant then gave the corpse a blow between the shoulders to expel the blood, and finally threw the carcass aside like a log of wood. He then repeated the same pleasant programme with the next. I never thought a man's head could come off so easily; it was like chopping cabbages, only accompanied with a peculiar and most horrid sound—that of cutting meat, in fact. There was a dense crowd of Japanese present, including many women, and even children. These people never ceased to eat, smoke, and chatter the whole time, making remarks on the performance, and even occasionally laughing, just as if they were at a theater. The executioner poured water on his sword between each decapitation, as one wets a knife in order to cut India-rubber."

A Parlor Amusement.

Eyes, mouth, chin and nose all contribute to indicate the character of their owners, and now somebody finds that the hair has a similar use. Straight, lank, stringy-looking hair indicates weakness and cowardice. Curly hair denotes a quick temper. Frizzly hair, set on one's head as if each individual hair were ready to fight its neighbor, denotes coarseness. Black hair indicates personal courage, especially when one is cornered, with a wonderful degree of pertinacity and a disposition to hang on until whatever is undertaken be accomplished. Also, a strong predisposition to revenge wrongs and insults, real or fancied. Brown hair denotes a fondness for life, a friendly disposition, ambition, earnestness of purpose, capacity for business, and reliability in friendship, in proportion as the hair is fine. Very fine hair indicates an even disposition, a readiness to forgive, with a desire to add to the happiness of others. Persons with fine light-brown or auburn hair, inclined to curl or friz, are quick tempered, and are given to resentment and revenge. Light-brown hair, inclined to redness, with a freckled skin, is a certain indication of deceit, treachery, and a disposition to do something mean by a friend, when that friend can no longer be used to advantage. By remembering these items, quite an amusing parlor game of fortune-telling may be instituted.

The Criminal Code of Japan.

One of the most beneficent achievements of the present government of Japan has been the reform of the criminal code; and an official statement just published shows, by means of a comparative table, the degrees of punishment attached to certain crimes under the old and the new law. Some of these modifications are very curious, and the penalties themselves not less so. For example, under the old code, the wounding of the head of a household by a hired servant was punished by pillory and crucifixion; now it is followed by strangling merely. Under the bloody code of the tycoons, stealing ten yen (ten dollars) or more was punishable with death; now the maximum of petty theft is put at three hundred dollars, and is punished by penal servitude for life. The penalty for murder of a parent by stratagem, under the old code, was death by crucifixion, the unnatural offspring being first exhibited through the public streets with a halter around his neck; now the parricide or matricide is done to death by impalement. Punishment for the unchastity of priests in commuted to penal servitude for ten years; the guilty woman in the case, if a spinster, is held innocent; if married, she is condemned to one year of penal servitude.

Figs.—The annual importation of preserved figs into the United States is about six million pounds, and the importation price or cost is about seven cents per pound, amounting in round figures to $420,000. Nearly all the figs consumed in the United States comes from Turkey, which country supplies Great Britain with the same article.

TONNAGE AND SHIPBUILDING.

Annual Report of the Registrar of the Treasury—Complete Statement of the Tonnage and the Shipbuilding Interests of the Country.

The forthcoming report of the Registrar of the Treasury shows that the work of the bureau has been performed by a less number of clerks than usual, although the work in many of the divisions has increased. In the loan division the total number of coupon and registered bonds issued during the year was 68,067; the number of coupon and registered bonds cancelled, 298,047. The amount of bonds issued during the year was as follows: Original issue, $45,191,900; coupon converted into registered, $12,622,200; transfers of registered stock, $97,416,550; total amount issued, $155,230,650. The amount of coupon and registered bonds cancelled was as follows: Coupon bonds exchanged for registered, $12,622,200; registered bonds transferred, $97,116,550; coupon and registered bonds redeemed, $439,103,600; total, $249,142,350. The amount of cancelled coupons turned over to the committee for destruction was $122,008,650.

The note and coupon division shows the number of treasury notes and gold certificates counted, assorted, arranged, registered, and examined was 33,759, amounting to $45,377,730. The number of bonds registered, examined, scheduled, numbered, and delivered to the committee for destruction was 315,740, amounting to $162,899,750, with $3,973,129 coupons attached. The number of coin checks registered and examined was 10,098, amounting to $9,627,590. The number of detached coupons counted, assorted, and arranged numerically was 5,021,590. In the note and fractional currency division the amount of notes counted, examined, cancelled, and destroyed was $106,073,738, showing a decrease of $4,555,688 as compared with the year before; while the number of notes was 159,160,301, showing an increase over the year before of 21,793,179.

TONNAGE.

The tonnage employed in foreign trade has increased 19,493 tons, and the tonnage employed in coastwise trade has increased 233,688 tons. The total increase of tonnage, including that employed in fisheries, is 258,280 tons, as shown in the following tables:

1872.		Tons.
Registered vessels	2,699	1,410,647
Enrolled and licensed vessels	28,415	3,027.099

Registered vessels	2,759	1,423,238
Enrolled and licensed vessels	29,913	3,272,738
Totals	32,672	4,696,026

The comparison of the various classes of vessels is as follows:

1872.		Tons.
Sailing vessels	17,655	2,325,375
Steam vessels	3,753	1,111,562
Canal boats	8,085	764,713

Canal boats	8,975	820,328
Barges	1,738	324,454
Totals	32,672	4.690,026

The proportion of the steam tonnage of the country employed in foreign trade is 16.7 per cent. The increase in the aggregate tonnage of the country during the year—1,558 vessels, 258,280 tons—is made up as follows: The sailing tonnage has increased 294 vessels, 58,428 tons; the steam tonnage, 262 vessels, 44,801 tons; the canal-boat tonnage, 885 vessels, 115,615 tons, and the barge tonnage, 117 vessels, 39,348 tons.

SHIPBUILDING.

The amount of tonnage built during the year exceeds that of any year since 1865. It is attributable to two causes—the unusual great, if not unprecedented losses at sea and the fact that, owing to the advance in prices of labor and materials abroad, the cost of American-built ships is now but slightly greater than that of the best British. The total number of vessels built during the past two fiscal years, with the tonnage of each class, is shown below:

	Vessels.	Tons
Sailing vessels, 1872	645	76,291
Sailing vessels, 1873	804	144,629
Steam vessels, 1872	292	62,210
Steam vessels, 1873	402	88,011

Canal boats, 1873	835	78,288

Total, 1872	1,643	209,052
Total, 1873	2,271	359,246

The increase of tonnage built over the preceding year was therefore 628 vessels—150,194 tons.

The tonnage of vessels built during the last two years within the several grand divisions of the country are shown below:

	Tons.
Atlantic and Gulf coasts for 1872	129,820
Atlantic and Gulf coasts for 1873	212,694

Western rivers for 1873	48,659
Total for 1872	209,052
Total for 1873	309,246

The number of iron vessels built during the year is 26; tonnage, 26,548; which are all steam vessels.

Of the foregoing, three were ocean steamers of the largest class, built for foreign trade.

Below is shown the tonnage built in the country since 1868:

	1868.	1869.	1870.	1871.	1872.	1873.

Total.	2,801	4,545	8,281	15,470	12,756	26,548

The tonnage engaged in fisheries during the past two years is as follows:

Cod and mack'l	2,385	97,546	2,453	109,518
Whale fisheries	217	51.608	187	44,755

The tonnage employed in the cod and mackerel fisheries seems to be steadily increasing. The following table shows the amount of tonnage employed in the cod and mackerel fisheries, with the percentage belonging, in each State:

States.	Tonnage.	Per Cent.
Massachusetts	54,188	49.5
Maine	46,136	42.2

California	1,177	1.1
Rhode Island	1,071	1.0
New Hampshire	922	0.8
Total	109,518	100.0

The amount of tonnage employed in the whole fisheries has decreased during the last year. The whole amount on the 3d of June, 1873, was 187 vessels, 44,755 tons, which shows a decline of 30 vessels and 6,823 tons, as follows:

A Colored Millionaire.

Men whose taxes foot up from one to ten thousand each year can get 2 per cent. a month for it, or use it in even more lucrative ways, while the interest on their taxes is nothing in comparison. Hundreds of thousands of dollars are retained in this way.

A notable instance of this practice is the case of a colored millionaire who has dodged paying his taxes until they now amount to nearly $100,000, due to the city and State. This man is a character for a romance. He is so abstemious that he may be called a miser. He disdains rest, and with wonderful activity works on in a small and obscure one-story house, remote from the business portions of the city. This building is his office and his home. It is dingy and dilapidated on the outside. Within, a kind of lobby, partitioned off from the main room, is the miser's office. A desk full of pigeon holes crammed with papers, an iron safe and a chair or two, constitute the only furniture. Beyond are the rooms where he lives with his mother, a woman almost 100 years old. Yet this man, so unpretentious in his business surroundings, has nearly a hundred tenements scattered all over the city, which bring him anywhere from $2,000 to $2,300 per month.

He owes over 250 different properties, estimated to be worth at least $700,000, besides bonds and cash to a large amount. This man, however, never pays any taxes, except when he disposes of a piece of property, and then only on that property. In the Sheriff's office are tax-writs against him dating back twelve years, and to some of them are attached as much as six yards of foolscap, filled throughout with closely-written descriptions of his properties. The reason for avoiding his annual taxes is a speculative one. The city charges him 10 per cent. interest on his money, which he never loans except on mortgage; he can make from 18 to 24 per cent. Every tenth year, also, the taxes of one year are wiped out by proscription.—New Orleans Times.

Prices Must Come Down.—The fall in the price of dry goods is the first indication of a return to sound business. Dealers in other descriptions of merchandise must follow suit, or they will stand but a poor chance of doing any business this winter. The charges exacted for everything that one wears or uses in the house have long been out of all proportion to the worth of the article. Persons of all ages have had to suffer. From the child's toy to the old man's overcoat there has been extortion practiced on all sides. The toy stores generally look for a good trade from this time forth, but they will not get it unless they ask something like reasonable prices for their articles. So with other branches of trade. The public will now keep their money in their pockets unless they are treated with common fairness, and we are glad to see the dry goods dealers setting an excellent example.—New York Times.

Use of Raw Hide.—The skin of an animal, whether cow, calf, colt, or horse, that dies on the farm, is worth more at home than at the tanner's. Cut it into narrow strips, and shave off the hair with a sharp knife before the kitchen fire, or in your workshop, on stormy days and evenings. You may make them soft by rubbing. A rawhide halter-strap an inch wide, will hold a horse better, and last longer than an inch rope. It is stronger than hoop iron and more durable, and may be used to hoop dry casks and boxes, and for hinges. Try it on a broken thill, or any wood work that has been split. Put it on well, and nail fast. Thin skins make the best bag strings in the world. A rawhide rope is a good substitute for a chain. It is valuable to mend a broken link in a trace chain. For some purposes it is best to use in its natural state. For some purposes it may be dressed soft.

Decision Under the Bankruptcy Act.—Attorney-General Williams, on a question submitted to him by the Secretary of the Treasury, decides that payment made by a debtor to a creditor who has committed an act of bankruptcy, and against whom proceedings in bankruptcy have been instituted and are pending, but who has not yet been adjudged bankrupt, will not be valid in the event of an adjudication of bankruptcy in such proceedings if payment transpired subsequent to the filing of the petition therein; and that payment made by debtor to a creditor who is known to have committed an act of bankruptcy, but against whom proceedings have not at the time been taken, is valid in so far as it is affected by the existing bankruptcy laws.

Grape-stones are said to be a better substitute for coffee than chicory is. When roasted and ground they are said to possess an aroma very much like that of East India coffee, and the beverage obtained therefrom is about the same as coffee in taste, though inferior in quality. The beverage furnished by many of the restaurants is very far from being "the same as coffee in taste," and it is probable that decided improvement could be made on the present article by the use of grape-stones.

Mrs. Hanna Wooster is the centenarian of York county, Maine, having been born Dec. 27, 1772. She has never been in a railway car, but hopes to visit Philadelphia on July 3, 1876, in the same car with Miss Lucy Langdon Newell, of Alfred, Me., who was born Juty 4, 1776.

Our present Secretary of State may not be a flounder, but it is evident that he is anything but a sword fish.—New York Graphic.

POSTAL AFFAIRS.

Synopsis of the Report of the Postmaster-General—A Plan for the Prepayment of Newspaper Postage—The Proposed Postal Savings Banks and Telegraph.

The following is a synopsis of the annual report of Postmaster-General Creswell:

The ordinary revenues of this Department for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1873, were $22,906,741, and the expenditures of all kinds $29,084,945. For the year ended June 30, 1872, the ordinary revenues were $21,915,426, and the expenditures $26,658,192. In 1873 there was an increase of revenue over 1872 of $1,081,313, or 4.93 per cent., and an increase of expenditures of $2,426,753, or 9.1 per cent. A comparison of 1873 with 1871 shows an increase in the revenues of $2,959,696, or 14.42 per cent, and an increase of expenditures of $4,694,841, or 19.24 per cent. The increase of stamps, stamped envelopes, etc., issued over the last fiscal year is $1,329,000. There has been a gain during the year on through-time mails between New York and San Francisco of two days going westward, and one day going eastward. Gains on the other great through lines have been proportionate. The number of railway postoffice lines in operation is fifty-nine, extending over 15,000 miles of road.

With this report ends the first decade of the free delivery service in this country. The grounds relied upon for its establishment and extension, namely, public convenience and a stimulus to correspondence, have been fully verified by experience. Thus far this system, with its letter boxes located at convenient places throughout the large postal cities, and its frequent deliveries and collections of mail matter by carriers, has proved to be a virtual extension of the postoffice to every house. The transaction of the postal business of large communities by a few men selected for the purpose is justified in an economic point of view by time saved to the people, the reduction of labor in postoffices, the facilities and the stimulus given to correspondence, and the frequency, promptness, and accuracy secured in the delivery of letters, and the reduction of the number of advertised and dead letters. While these benefits are most strikingly seen in the larger cities, they are felt and approved in all places where frequency of the mails, density of population, and distance from the office make it inconvenient for citizens to call or send for their mail. The average of population to each carrier varies with the number of people to be served, the extent of territory, and frequency of deliveries. The general average, however, is estimated at 3,690. The expense of the system at each office is paid out of the revenue of that office. It seems but fair, therefore, that this mode of delivery should be extended to all cities where the population, business, extent of territory, and frequency of mails may authorize the requisite force and outlay. Just how these elements may combine to warrant the extension of the system it is difficult to determine, but I am of the opinion that it might advantageously be provided for cities having in their corporate limits a population of not less than 10,000.

The total number of officers and employes of the department is 47,000, of whom 31,863 are postmasters.

Money order transactions show an increase of over $9,000,000, or an increase of 18.55 per cent. More than 100,000,000 of postal cards will be issued during the first year.

The several acts for the repeal of the franking privilege came in operation on the 1st of July last. The results of the first quarter of the current year are highly satisfactory, and have fully verified the predictions of the friends of repeal. The confusion and delay in the distribution and transmission of the mails, caused by the sudden throwing, without notice or system, of immense masses of free matter on important postal routes, have been remedied, thus making it possible to effect a decided improvement in the organization and practical working of the service. The increase in all issues for the single quarter following the abolition of franking was $1,635,554, or 351 per cent. The large increase of receipts is derived altogether from general and departmental matter, and from postal cards. Publications of a class heretofore printed and sent out by order of Congress have been almost entirely cut off since the 1st of July. Of the relief this afforded some idea may be formed from the fact that during the three months next preceding that day there were forwarded from this city over a single route on the Baltimore and Ohio railway in box cars, independently of the amount conveyed in regular mail cars, 665,504 pounds of such publications, as appears from returns of actual weights thereof, taken by the company with the permission of the department. These facts, it is respectfully submitted, are ample to sustain our opinion given in the special report to Congress, under date of Jan. 12, 1871. The cost of this free matter charged with the regular rates of postage would amount to $2,543,327.72 annually, and it is hoped this fact will be deemed sufficient to prevent any attempt to revive an abuse which would impose most grievous burdens upon the postal service at a time when that service is struggling to meet the growing wants of the country in its course of unparalled development.

I respectfully submit the following plan for the prepayment of newspapers of the second class, and respectfully urge its adoption: Let all publishers, or their business managers or agents, be required at the beginning of every quarter to state under oath that, after dilligent inquiry, they are satisfied that they will send in the mails to regular subscribers during the coming quarter not more than —— copies of the newspaper known as the —— (giving the number of copies and the name of the newspaper); and let them be further required to pay in advance the postage prescribed by law, and asking them for duplicate receipts, one of which shall be transmitted to the Post-office Department; and to afford a reasonable opportunity for an increase of circulation during the quarter, let the oath taken at the beginning of the next quarter embrace all the additional copies for the last quarter as well as the number to be sent during the then commencing quarter. On the other hand, let Postmasters be required to return, within two weeks after the beginning of every quarter, correct lists of all the newspapers addressed to regular subscribers and dispatched in the mails from their respective offices, stating the number of copies of each newspaper, average weight per paper, number of issues per week, and the amount of money paid as postage therefor. Payment having been made in advance for the quarter, no stamp on manipulation would be needed, but when received into the office every paper answering to the description given in the receipts would be treated as paid. The papers of persons subscribing after quarter-day would be forwarded immediately, and paid for at the beginning of the next quarter. So marked would be the improvement in the collections under this law that I believe the department could safely consent, in case of its adoption, to a reduction in newspaper rates of 40 per cent. on the present price. At the reduced rate, I am satisfied the department would realize more revenue than now. I also believe that, so great would be the saving of labor to newspaper proprietors, in the preparation of their papers for the mail, and so decided the dispatch and the freedom from mistakes in transmission and delivery that they would find the new plan more advantageous to them than the present one. A similar plan could be adopted for magazines and periodicals of the second class.

The remainder of the report is devoted to a long and elaborate discussion and advocacy of a system of postoffice savings banks, and to a renewal of Mr. Creswell's former recommendation for the establishment of a postal telegraph.

The Postmaster-General, at some length, recommends Postal Savings Depositories. Throughout the plan for their organization and workings two ideas predominate: First, the United States is to insure the safe return of principal and interest whenever demanded; and second, the extensive machinery of the postoffice is to be used to bring its advantages home of the great mass of the people. Such a system would not only encourage economy and habits of saving on the part of all who might be in a way of earning small sums of money, but would tend largely to utilize and keep in circulation the immense amounts which are paid out for wages and in business, and give every depositor a direct interest in the stability of the Government.

The Postmaster-General again urges the assumption by the Government of the control of telegraphs. A Government postal telegraph is the only means by which the full benefit of this great invention can be secured, for wherever the telegraph is under Government management, it is operated at its minimum cost, and people receive the benefit in low rates of transmission and greatly extended facilities. The telegraph should be made a part of the postal system without further delay. As Congress does not seem inclined to exercise the discretion given in the third section of the act of July 24, 1866, to appoint appraisers to value lines, property and effects of the companies now in operation, and as the Western Union Company appears to be unwilling to make voluntary sale at a fair price, the Postmaster-General recommends that provision be made by law for the immediate establishment of the postal telegraph, and for the construction of all such lines as may be needed, under the direction of competent officers of the Engineer Corps of the army. The experience they acquired during the war of the rebellion would enable them to do the work in a most economical and satisfactory manner.

Internal Revenue Report.

The report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shows that the aggregate receipts from all sources for the year ending with June last, exclusive of the direct tax upon lands and the duty upon the capital, circulation and deposits of National Banks, were $114,075,456. The amount includes sums refunded and allowed on drawbacks. The total amount on drawbacks was $52,346. On spirits, tobacco, and general merchandise there were refunded for taxes illegally assessed and collected, $618,667. The receipts from the several sources relating to distilled spirits were for the year 1872, $49,475,516; for 1873, $52,099,371. Increase in the receipts from the gallon tax on distilled spirits, $10,013,276; from the special tax on rectifiers and dealers in liquors, $1,094,264.

A part of this increase was, however, offset by the loss of nearly $400,000 during the last year, by the reduction of the value of stamps for spirits other than tax-paid stamps, from 25 cents to 10 cents each, and by the further loss of a little over $8,000,000 by the repeal of certain acts relating to spirits, leaving a balance of more than $2,500,000 increase in receipts from all sources relating to spirits.

The production of spirits during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1873, was, from materials other than fruit, 68,236,567 taxable gallons; total production from fruit, 2,914,800. Tax collected on spirits withdrawn from warehouse during the fiscal year 1872, $32,457,235; during the fiscal year 1873, $41,102,921; tax on spirits withdrawn for export during the fiscal year 1873, $1,651,041. The tax received on imitation wines during the year ending June 30, 1873, was $3,551; on fermented liquors at $1 per barrel, for the years 1872 and 1873, was $8,009,969 and $8,910,823 respectively.

Total receipts from tobacco for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1873, were $34,386,303. Compared with the total receipts for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1872, there was a decrease of collections on manufactured tobacco of all descriptions of $1,172,917. There was an increase in the total receipts from the manufacture and sale of tobacco, snuff and cigars, in all their forms, over the receipts from the same sources for the preceding fiscal year, of $650,132. One hundred and sixteen millions four hundred and fifty thousand nine hundred and thirty-four pounds are given as the actual product of the year, so far as such products have been reported, and showing an increase over the annual production reported for the preceding fiscal year of 9,180,079 pounds. The number of cigars, cheroots, etc., on which taxes were collected during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1873, was 1,807,134,646, showing an excess over the number reported for the preceding fiscal year of 279,328,674. There was an increase of 544,064 pounds of exported tobacco during the last fiscal year. The aggregate receipts for the last fiscal year exceeded the Commissioner's estimate by $4,075,456. It is estimated that the total receipts for the current fiscal year will be $100,000,000.

The plan adopted of abolishing the offices of Assessors and Assistant Assessors reduced expenses $1,062,827 lower than the estimated reduction under the eighty-district plan, and $1,060,000 lower than the appropriations for 1873 under the old system. The estimates for the fiscal year 1874 show a further reduction of $9,478, or $1,069,458 less than the appropriation for the fiscal year 1873, and $1,072,285 less than the estimate for 1874 on the eighty-district plan. The Commissioner recommends that Collectors' salaries be fixed at amounts ranging from $2,500 to $5,000, and Supervisors' salaries at $4,000 per annum, and repeats the suggestion contained in his report Nov. 21, 1871, that Sec. 44 of the act of July 20, 1868, be amended by making the minimum penalty smaller, such penalty being now a fine of not less than $1,000, with not less than six months' imprisonment.

The Commissioner recommends legislation limiting the time to July 1, 1874, within which documentary stamps, issued under Schedule B, of a greater denomination than 2 cents, may be presented for redemption. The report concludes with the suggestion made in the last annual report that the amendments of June 6, 1872, to section 59, of the act of July 20, 1868, relating to special taxes of dealers in liquors, should be made more explicit.

The Monetary Difficulties of the World.

The London Times gives the following explanation of the fact that there are financial troubles in many countries at once:

"It will perhaps be asked how it is that while money, like water, has the constant tendency to find a level, there can be a simultaneous scarcity in all the chief places of the globe? The answer is that probably at no previous period has there been so simultaneous a hoarding. Not only has the improvident absorption in England been beyond any former precedent, but there is reason to believe that in America, Spain, and France, from different causes, the process has been on a still more unusual scale; while in Germany, although the gold coinage is gradually paid out in exchange for the old silver circulation, this silver circulation is retained by the Government, and practically amounts to the hoarding of the wealth obtained from France. If there should be a return to pacific and orderly government on the continent, a period of unsurpassed abundance would probably be witnessed, the effects of the American panic being certain to subside in due course; but the signs in France give little hope of such a consummation, and hence, although on this side the tendency may be toward a recovery of steadiness, there can, in the relations between trade and the money market, be no ground on which, for the present, calculations can be based with any approach to certainty."

MONSTER CHEESES.—At a cheese factory near Utica, N. Y., there have been made this fall fourteen big cheeses, weighing from 1,000 to 2,200 pounds. The largest one is two feet high, and four feet six inches across the top. The Utica Herald says it is "as large over as a large millstone, and considerably thicker." In other words, it is as big as a big stone. It took 21,000 pounds of milk, and it weighs 2,200 pounds. It requires a windlass to turn it over. This cheese was made as a present to the English friends of the donor.—Cleveland Herald.

Failures in Business.

The man who has never failed in business cannot possibly know whether he is honest or not, cannot possibly know whether he has any "grit" in him, or is worth a button. It is the man who fails, and then rises who is really great in his way.

Peter Cooper failed in making hats, failed as a cabinetmaker, locomotive builder, and grocer; but as often as he failed he "tried and tried again," until he could stand upon his feet alone, then crowned his victory by giving a million dollars to help the poor boys in times to come.

Horace Greeley tried three or four lines of business before he founded the Tribune, and made it worth a million of dollars.

Patrick Henry failed at everything he undertook, until he made himself the orator of his age and nation.

The founder of the Herald kept on failing and sinking money for ten years, and then made one of the most profitable newspapers on earth.

Stephen A. Douglas made dinner tables and bedsteads and bureaus for many a long year before he made himself a "giant" on the floor of Congress.

Abraham Lincoln failed to make both ends meet by chopping wood, failed to earn his salt in the galley-slave life of a Mississippi flat-boatman; he had not even wit enough to run a grocery, and yet he made himself the grandest character of the nineteenth century.

Gen. Grant failed at everything except smoking cigars; he learned to tan hides, but could not sell leather enough to purchase a pair of breeches; a dozen years ago he "brought up" on top of a wood pile, "teaming" it to town for forty dollars a month; and yet he is one of the great soldiers of the age, and is now the honored head of a great nation.

The lesson for every young man is this: As long as you have health and power to do, go ahead; if you fail at one thing, try another, and a third—a dozen even. Look at the spider: nineteen times it tried to throw out its web to a place of attachment, and on the twentieth it succeeded. The young man who has the "gift of continuance" is the one whose foot will some day stand on high ground, and will be able to breast the angry waters of human discouragement.—Journal of Health.

A Pleasant Day.

Among the large number gathered at the horse-sale, Friday, was Col. Higginson, who is, as our Danbury readers well know, very deaf. Alongside of him stood a young man, a stranger, engaged, as was the Colonel, in watching the sale. During a lull he turned toward the Colonel and politely observed, "A pleasant day." The Colonel saw the movement of the lips, but of course heard no sound, but not wishing to lose what might be a matter of vital interest, he said, "What's that?" "It is a pleasant day," repeated the young man, suddenly realizing the dreadful insignificance of the statement. "I did not quite hear you," explained the Colonel, leaning forward with some anxiety. The young man turned very red, and looked as if he was about to descend into the bowels of the earth with his hat on. "I said it was a pleasant day," he again stammered, raising his voice, and shivering at the sound. The Colonel's hand went up to his ear, "Really, sir," he said, in a bland manner, "I am afraid you will have to speak a little louder." The young man grew redder than ever. How gladly he would have turned and fled; how bitterly he regretted not keeping the information to himself. But the Colonel stood waiting, and, raising himself by his toes, the young man shrilly screamed: "It is a pleasant day." The Colonel heard this, and promptly coincided, and the young man retreated amid the encouraging smiles of the populace.—Danbury News.

"Patrons of Husbandry" and "Grangers."

The terms "Patrons of Husbandry" and "Grangers" do not seem to be properly understood. "Patrons" are often erroneously called Grangers. A "Granger," as defined by Webster, is a bailiff. All members of the Order of "Patrons of Husbandry" are "Patrons." The Grange is the place where they meet—the Lodge. With the same propriety might we call Masons or Odd-Fellows "Lodgers," because they meet in lodges. The word "grange" is derived from the French, and means a granary, or a farm with stables and necessary outbuildings. As the degrees of the Order can be worked in an open field as well as in the granary, the place of meeting is called a "grange." There are "subordinate granges," composed of members who have taken the first three degrees; State granges composed of the Masters and Past-Masters of the subordinate granges; and a National Grange, composed of the Masters and Past-Masters of the State granges. There is no different designation for the members of the separate bodies; all are Patrons. The members of the Order should attempt to correct the impression about "Grangers" which has become so prevalent.—Rock River Farmer.

A Scene in Havana.

Gen. Oscar V. Dayton was in the city of Havana during the carnival which followed the Spanish butcheries, and relates to a New York Tribune reporter what he saw: He says that the news came on the day of the arrival of the new Captain-General; that the volunteers were wild with excitement; that his quarters were with a friend at the Hotel San Carlos; and that, while admonished that his life would be in peril if it were known by the volunteers that he was an American, he was enabled to overlook from the balcony the entire scene of rejoicing. All the streets, he observed, were decorated with the Spanish colors—red, white and red—extending from one side to the other, overhead, and the volunteers marched back and forth maddened with liquor, the bands playing the national airs. He said that the air rang with their curses upon Americans; that these demonstrations continued for three days, constantly increasing in their madness, and that during this carnival he did not consider it safe to venture into the streets. He said the constant threat was that they would get rid of the "pirates," as they were called, before there was a chance for interference. He related the following incident as illustrating the desperation with which the patriots fight. The volunteers demanded of an acquaintance of his an ox for a barbecue, on the eve of one of their battles with the Cubans; but when the fight was over, so great had been the slaughter of the Spanish troops that there were none left able to indulge in the feast, and the ox remained unconsumed.

Home Rule for Ireland.

The "Home-Rule" party in Ireland, which is the latest thing in Irish politics, have published in London a definite statement of what they seek. They say they want to obtain—

"For our country the right and privilege of managing our own affairs by a Parliament assembled in Ireland, composed of Her Majesty the Sovereign and her successors, and the Lords and Commons of Ireland.

"To secure for that Parliament, under a federal arrangement, the right of legislating for and regulating all matters relating to the internal affairs of Ireland, and control over Irish resources and revenues, subject to the obligation of contributing our just proportion of the Imperial expenditures.

"To leave to an Imperial Parliament the power of dealing with all questions affecting the Imperial Crown and Government, legislation regarding the colonies and other dependencies of the Crown, the relations of the united Empire with foreign States, and all matters appertaining to the defense and the stability of the Empire at large.

"To obtain such an adjustment of the relations between the two countries without any interference with the prerogatives of the Crown, or any disturbance of the principles of the Constitution."

This is something very different from Irish nationality, and excludes all thought of separation from Great Britain. If granted, it is claimed it will extinguish Fenianism and establish peace in Ireland.

The Printer's Estate.

We find in an exchange the following remarks, which all printers and publishers will agree in calling sensible, and commend them to the attention of the reader. They will apply to all localities in which newspapers circulate: The printer's dollars—where are they? A dollar here and a dollar there scattered over the country, miles and miles apart; how shall they be gathered together? The paper maker, the journeyman compositor, the building owner, the grocer, the tailor, and all assistants to him in carrying on his business, have their demands hardly ever small as a single dollar. But the mites here and there must be diligently and patiently hoarded, or the wherewithal to discharge the liabilities will never become sufficiently bulky. We imagine the printer will have to get up an address to his widely scattered dollars something like the following: "Dollars, halves, quarters, dimes and all manner of fractions into which you are divided, collect yourselves and come home. You are wanted. Combinations of all sorts of men that help to make the printer a proprietor gather in such force and demand with such good reasons your appearance at this counter, that nothing short of you will please them. Collect yourselves, for, valuable as you are, you will never pay the cost of collecting. Come here in single file, that the printer may form you in battalions, and send you forth again to battle for him and vindicate his feeble credit." Reader, are you sure you haven't a couple of printer's dollars sticking about your clothes? If you have, order them home immediately.

How to See Down a Well.

It is not generally known how easy a matter it is to explore the bottom of a well, cistern or pond of water by the use of a common mirror. When the sun is shining brightly, hold a mirror so that the reflected rays of light will fall into the water. A bright spot will be seen at the bottom—so light as to show the smallest object plainly. By this means you may examine the bottom of wells fifty feet deep, when half full or more of water. The smallest straw or other objects may be perfectly seen from the surface. If a well or cistern be under cover, or shaded by a building so that the sunlight will not fall near the opening, it is only necessary to employ two mirrors—using one to reflect the light to the opening, and the other to reflect it down into the water. Light may be thrown fifty or a hundred yards to the precise spot desired, and then downward. Half a dozen reflections may be made, though each mirror diminishes the brilliancy of the light.

CURE FOR A FELON.—As soon as discovered, take some spirits of turpentine in a cup, dip the finger in it, and then hold the hand near a hot fire till dry; then dip it in again and repeat for fifteen minutes, or until the pain ceases. The next day, with a sharp knife, pare off the thick skin and you will find something like a honeycomb filled with clear water; open the cells and the felon is gone. If the felon is too far advanced for turpentine, oil of origanum, treated in the same way, will cure. If too far advanced for either to cure, the felon will still be benefited, or it will be less painful. Never draw it.

A TINY ENGINE.—The smallest engine in the world is now in possession of John Penn, of Greenwich, England, the eminent maker of great engines. It will stand on a three-penny piece; it really covers less space, for its base plate measures only three-eighths of an inch by three-tenths. So small are some of the parts that they require a powerful magnifying glass to see their form. The whole weight of the model is less than a three-penny piece. It works admirably, and when working, its crank-shaft performs from twenty to thirty thousand revolutions in a minute.

THE Scientific American makes a good point in calling on the various trades unions of the country to subscribe to help poor workingmen who are out of employment. These organizations have, in the past, contributed immense sums of money to help each other maintain strikes; now let us see whether they have philanthropy enough to aid the needy in their time of distress.

The Executions at Santiago.

[Havana (Nov. 15) Correspondence of the New York Herald.]

Regarding the most prominent affair in the minds of all at present, the capture of the Virginius and the fate of the unfortunate found on board of her, I find the following in the columns of the Bandera Espanola, of Santiago de Cuba, of the 8th:

"At a quarter to 5 this afternoon (the 7th), at the usual place, thirty-seven of the crew made prisoners in the steamer Virginius were shot to death. They met their fate with the greatest resignation. Twenty-seven were foreign pirates, and ten Cubans."

Further advices received from Santiago de Cuba state that, besides the thirty-seven executed on the 7th inst., fifty-seven more were shot on the 10th inst. The names of these are not given.

On the 11th, the following were executed: Mola, Oscar Varona, Agustin Varona, William Valls, Boitel, Tenulõ, Castellanos, Santa Rosa, Consuegra, Porras Pita, Otera, and Quesada.

The crew was executed in the public square—butchered, rather, as private reports state that the marines who fired were fully five minutes completing their horrible task, as they were miserable marksmen.

Mr. E. G. Schmitt, the United States Consul at that place, did his duty nobly, and was most active and zealous in his efforts to induce the authorities to proceed more slowly and with more humanity, and pay some attention to treaty rights; but all in vain, as all his efforts were set at naught. He was threatened, bullied and insulted. He promptly protested formally against the action of the Governor and all concerned, and also filed his protest before the Marine Court, which was engaged in the trial of the crew, as soon as he got the information from the Consul at Kingston of the fact of the Virginius being an American vessel.

Another insult was put upon the Consul, for, just previous to the moment when the prisoners left the jail, three soldiers, as guards, were stationed at the Consul's residence—one at each corner and one at the front of his door. It happened that the French Consul, his Chancellor, and several other persons were at the time with Mr. Schmitt, and as the time was too short to demand an explanation and have the soldiers removed,—as every one stopped to inquire if the United States Consul was under guard,—joined in making a proces verbal of the circumstance.

At 4 o'clock p. m. precisely the condemned were marched out of jail, which is not far from the Consul's office, and filed past four by four. Most of them, in passing, saluted the bare flagstaff of the Consulate by inclining their heads. The last to go by were Capt. Fry, Mr. Harris and Mr. Alfaro, who, besides saluting, waved a mournful good-by to the Consul and groups of gentlemen standing on the piazza of the Consul's residence. All the unfortunates marched unwaveringly to the fatal spot.

How the Hair Should be Cared For.

The hair should be thoroughly washed with warm water and castile soap at least once a month. The color of the water after the first rinsing will expose the necessity of this hair-bath. To wash and dry the head in a thorough manner, without pulling out the hair or causing discomfort to its possessor, is an art. Soda or borax, which is so generally used in washing the hair, is highly injurious. To preserve the hair in good condition, it should be brushed every night until it is soft and glossy. Rubbing the scalp with a little bay water or weak spirits of any kind will keep it white and free from dandruff. "False" or ornamental hair should be carefully kept to be endurable. The habit of some persons of laying their coils upon the bureau, or hanging them on the gas-fixture at the side of the glass on removing them from their heads at night, is extremely untidy, as they become dusty and uncleanly from this exposure. Switches can be kept in good order for a long time if well brushed and placed in boxes when not in use.

How to Clean Kid Gloves.

Place a fine towel folded on the table, on which lay your glove, take a piece of flannel and with the forefinger dip it lightly into milk, then rub it about twice on a piece of common brown soap; proceed to rub the glove, commencing with the thumb, and as the flannel finger tip becomes dirty change it till no dirt comes off the glove. After cleaning the front and back of the finger, open the finger and again lay it down flat, this time to clean the sides, otherwise you could find a streak of dirt when the glove is dry. After the fingers clean the palm and back, taking care no particle escapes, otherwise a streak will appear. When the glove is dry pull it out, and a white clean glove will be the result. Too much soap stiffens the glove; too much milk is equally objectionable.

HYGIENIC USE OF TEA.—Dr. Adam Smith, in a paper read before the London Society of Arts, recommends the use of tea in the following cases: After a full meal, when the system is oppressed; for the corpulent and the old; for hot climates, and especially for those who, living there, eat freely or drink milk or alcohol; in cases of suspended animation; for soldiers who in time of peace take too much food, in relation to the waste proceeding in the body; for soldiers and others marching in hot climates, for then, by promoting evaporation and cooling the body, it prevents in a degree the effects of too much food, as of too great heat.

"WHAT," asks Dr. Stebbins, "might be done with the money wasted in war? Give me the money that has been spent in war, and I will purchase every foot of land on the globe. I will cloth every man women and child in an attire that kings and queens might be proud of. I will build a school-house on every hillside and in every valley over the whole habitable earth, and will supply the school-houses with a competent teachers. I will build an academy in every town, and endow a college in every State and fill it with able professors. I will crown every hill with a church consecrated to the promulgation of the gospel of peace. I will support in its pulpit an able teacher of righteousness, so that on every Sabbath morning the chime on one hill should answer to the chime on another round the earths broad circumference, and the voice of prayer and the song of praise should ascend like an universal holocaust to heaven."

A Mutton Millionaire.

The Kansas City Times recently interviewed Mr. P. C. Armijo, of New Mexico, who is probably the largest sheep-raiser in America. The herds roam over a range of three hundred miles square of territory, and in numbers are beyond human count. The Times says:

The Armijos are one of the wealthiest families in Bernanilla county, New Mexico. They have been engaged in the raising of sheep and wool for exportation East for several generations past. They are unable to estimate their herds accurately, but a rough guess aggregates the actual number at something over half a million. It seems almost incredible for people living east of the great plains to realize the vast extent and innumerable herds of sheep raised yearly in the mild, dry climate of New Mexico. Three families claim nearly two million head of sheep, which are scattered over a range of country more than 300 miles square.

In reply to a question as to whether the Indians troubled their immense herds, Mr. Armijo replied: We are not troubled by Indian depredations to any serious extent. The Indians are troublesome at times, but we scarcely ever miss what they drive off or slaughter. They seldom kil our flocks wantonly, and only take for food when they pass one of our herds. He relates an incident, in 1835, when the Apaches and Navajoes drove off 35,000 head at one raid, and thought that not less than 30,000 head had been stolen by Indians since then. The Indians drove off about half that number between 1861 and '65. "But," said Mr. Armijo, "We hardly miss them."

The Mexican sheep-raiser generally handles his herds in small flocks of about three thousand head. Each of these herds is under the personal superintendence of a major domo or overseer, who is assisted by shepherds, for whom the sheep have a fond affection. At night these immense flocks collect close together around their shepherds, and sleep peacefully, guarded by well-trained dogs.

These shepherds are paid from ten to fifteen dollars per month the year round, the overseer about twenty-five dollars per month. These herds roam at will over the boundless dry plains of New Mexico, without shelter all the year through. They require no feeding, the short, nutritious gramma grass, peculiar to New Mexico, affording good pasturage in winter as well as summer.

The Mexican sheep is smaller than American sheep, but is more healthy and hardy. They clip about two pounds of wool to the fleece; their wool is short and fine, and, from all that can be ascertained by tradition handed down through several generations, were pure Spanish merinos brought from Spain by Cortez' expedition. It is the intention of the sheep-raisers of New Mexico to improve their herds by direct importation of pure Spanish merinos.

Armijo's family have sold upward of 200,000 pounds of wool during the past year at forty-one cents per pound, which netted him the neat little sum of of $41,000. The entire wool clip of New Mexico is sent eastward through Kansas City over the Kansas Pacific.

These great sheep-raisers are now engaged in shipping large herds of sheep to Colorado. Mr. Armijo last season drove about twelve thousand head to Denver, and signifies his intention of doubling his drove next season. He says that with proper care and attention sheep in sufficient numbers may hereafter be raised upon the plains of Kansas and Colorado to supply the entire world with mutton and wool. During the conversation he related an incident of a man who, three years ago, purchased 4,500 head of sheep from Armijo and Baca at the low price of $2 each. To-day that man has 20,000 sheep, worth $40,000, to say nothing of the enormous profits accruing from the sale of wool during that time, And again he demonstrated the profits accruing from the purchase of 5,000 head. A man buys this number, and in six months he finds himself possessed of 10,000 sheep, one-half of the 5,000 increase being ewes and the others wethers. Here is an increase of 100 per cent. in six months in natural increase. The fleeces on the 5,000 head will be worth 50 cents each, and the 5,000 lambs can be sheared in the fall, yielding two pounds each. The increase of sheep is more than compound interest twenty times compounded. Mr. Armijo says that, allowing for losses, there is nothing in the world to prevent a man from getting rich at sheep-raising in five years.

A Neat Puzzle.

Here is something for our readers to puzzle out:—

"How a Dublin chaimbermaid is said to have got twelve commercial travelers into eleven bed-rooms, and yet to have given each a separate room. Here we have the eleven bed-rooms:—

1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9	10	11

"'Now,' said she, 'if two of you gentlemen will go into No. 1 bed-room, and wait there a few minutes, I'll find a spare room for one of you as soon as I've shown the others to their rooms.'

"Well, now, having thus bestowed two gentlemen in No. 1, she put the third in No. 2, the fourth in No. 3, the fifth in No. 4, the sixth in No. 5, the seventh in No. 6, the eight in No. 7, the ninth in No. 8, the tenth in No. 9, and the eleventh in No. 10. She then came back to No. 1, where, you will remember, she had left the twelfth gentleman along with the first, and said: 'I've now accommodated, all the rest, and have still a room to spare; so, if one of you will please step into No. 11, you will find it empty. Of course there is a hole in the saucepan somewhere; but we leave the reader to determine exactly where the fallacy is, with just a warning to think twice before deciding as to which, if, any, of the travelers was the 'odd man out.'"

Enjoying Themselves.

[Havana Cor. New York Times.]

The principal streets in Havana are again adorned with the National flags, and bull-fights, banquets and their accompaniments in honor of the victors are in course of preparation. The Virginius is now a gun-boat of the Spanish Navy, and as soon as she undergoes an overhauling in the dry-dock will be ready for service.

WISHART
PINE TREE!
Tar Cordial,
NATURE'S GREAT REMEDY
FOR
Throat and Lungs.
It is gratifying to us to inform the public that Dr. L. Q. C. Wishart's Pine Tree Tar Cordial, for Throat and Lungs diseases, has gained an enviable reputation from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, and from thence to some of the first families of Europe, not through the press alone, but by persons throughout the States actually benefited and cured at his office. While he publishes less, so say our reporters, he is unable to supply the demand. It gains and holds its reputation—
First. Not by stopping cough, but by loosening and assisting nature to throw off the unhealthy matter collected about the throat and bronchial tubes, which causes irritation.
Second. It removes the cause of irritation of the mucous membrane and bronchial tubes, assists the lungs to act and throw off the unhealthy secretions, and purifies the blood
Third. It is free from squills, lobelia, ipecac and opium, of which most throat and lung remedies are composed, which allay cough only, and disorganize the stomach. It has a soothing effect on the stomach, acts on the liver and kidneys, and lymphatic and nervous regions, thus reaching to every part of the system, and in its invigorating and purifying effects it has gained a reputation which it must hold above all others in the market.

A Mother's Boy.

"Is there a vacant place in the bank which I could fill?" was the inquiry of a boy, as, with a glowing cheek, he stood before the manager.

"There is none," was the reply. "Were you told that you could obtain a situation here? Who reccommended you?"

"No one reccommended me, sir," calmly answered the boy. "I only thought I would see."

There was a straightforwardness in the manner, and honest determination in the countenance of the lad, which pleased the man of business, and induced him to continue the conversation. He said:

'You must have friends who could aid you in obtaining a situation; have you told them?'

The quick flash of the deep blue eyes was quenched in the overtaking wave of sadness, and he said, though half musingly:

"My mother said it would be useless to try without friends;" then recollecting himself, he apologized for the interruption, and was about to withdraw, when the gentleman detained him by asking why he did not remain at school for a year or two, and then enter the business world

"I have no time," was the reply. "I study at home, and keep up with the other boys"

"Then you have a place already," said his interrogator. "Why did you leave it?"

"I have not left it," answered the boy quietly

"But you wish to leave. What is the matter?"

For an instant the child hesitated; then he replied, with half reluctant frankness,

"I must do more for my mother."

Brave words! talisman of success anywhere, everywhere. They sank into the heart of the listener—recalling the radient past. Grasping the hand of the astonished child, he said, with a quivering voice,

"My boy, what is your name? You shall fill the first vacancy for an apprentice that occurs in the bank. If, in the meantime, you need a friend, come to me. But now give me your confidence. Why do you wish to do more for poor mother? Have you no father?"

Tears filled his eyes as he replied. "My father is dead, my brothers and sisters are dead, and mother and I are left alone to help each other. But she is not strong, and I wish to take care of her. It will please her, sir, that you have been so kind, and I am much obliged to you." So saying, the boy left, little dreaming that his own nobleness of character had been as a bright glance of sunshine into that busy world he had so tremblingly entered. A boy animated by a desire to help his mother will always find friends.

The Downfall of Tweed.

We have recorded the announcement that Wm. M. Tweed has been condemned to twelve years imprisonment in the County Jail of New York and the imposition of a fine of $12,000. Since the fall of Cardinal Wolsey, in the time of Henry VIII., there has not been such a decline from enormous fortune as in the instance stated above. It is sudden and startling. Four years ago no man exercised the influence in New York, or begun to exercise it like Mr. Tweed. He was the chief manager of Tammany Hall, and through it run the Democratic organization, which, by a majority of tens of thousands, controlled the city It is well to state here some facts peculiar to New York. Tammany Hall has been in existence for three-quarters of a century. It was a building originally which was owned by leading Democrats. It was made the center of political operations. The Sachems—for in it there was a society which was based upon Indian customs —had the disposion of the Hall, and upon them devolved the calling of all Democratic Conventions and meetings. Thus, in this close corporation, which is continued to this day, is vested the regulation of all Democratic movements and the choice of all its delegates and candidates It has been recognized by all Democratic State and National Conventions. To control it was virtually to control the party. Mr. Tweed, who was originally a small tobacco merchant, from which he had graduated from the lower class of society, by his ability and perseverance succeeded in placing his fortune upon a firm footing. He was the embodiment of Tammany Hall, of the Democratic organization, and, therefore, of the city of New York. It was no idle compliment or partisan malice or exageration which, in municipal affairs, characterized him "Boss." He was so truly. The members of the Legislature for some years were his own creation. The Judges were his tools, and could be relied upon for any judgment that he might dictate. He and the leading associate in his ring, Mr. Sweeny, formerly the editor of the New York Mercury, were elected, with Gould and Fisk, as the controllers of the Erie Railroad. They managed it as they chose, and when its real owners made application to the Courts for restraint, the Courts of New York (Tweed's Courts) denied it to them. Every thing for years went on swimmingly: Immense stealings were going on. That railroad and the city were being run in debt, but it was carefully concealed. It is true the members of the ring were becoming rich. About four years ago Mr. Tweed's daughter was married to a gentleman in New Orleans. The expenses of the wedding and the presents to the bride exceeded those of the marriage of the daughter of Queen Victoria to the son of the Duke of Argyle, the wealthiest nobleman in Scotland. This was often made the subject of comment and congratulation by Mr. Tweed, the happy father-in-law. For some years previous to his overthrow it was the habit of Mr. Tweed's friends, political and personal, to celebrate the event by a meeting at his stable on Fifth Avenue. He lived down town in a Senatorial district where his majority for the State Senate could always be counted upon for at least twenty thousand. To move to Fifth avenue was therefore a prospective design. But upon the back of his magnificent lot he constructed an edifice for his horses, which cost more than a hundred thousand dollars. He therefore, entertained them there, and at the repast had, in order to have all things fitting, the champaign placed in the horse backets filled with ice. A friend of his, now a resident in New York, happened to be in Albany one evening, in the course of the legislature of 1870 and 1871, and proceeded to call upon him at his hotel. When there the servants came in and set the tables for a magnificent banquet, which was attended by sixty or seventy persons, all of high consideration, either as members or lobbyists, of both parties. Upon his old friend congratulating him upon his good luck in being present when he was giving a dinner to his friends, the "Boss" replied that there was nothing in that, for he could not have come amiss; that every evening in the session there was exactly the same entertainment "Why," says Tweed, "I pay the landlord here three hundred dollars a day for the session, and ought not that to embrace a night supper for me and my friends whom I am not able to see through the Legislative session?" "Mr. Tweed," said his Cincinnati, but old New York, friend, "this is a very fine hotel. What magnificent furniture you have in this suite of rooms." "Why, you are green," says Tweed; "this is my furniture; I bought it in New York, and it cost me twenty thousand dollars.'

All this indicates the character of Mr. Tweed in the days of his power and prosperity. The money he stole from the people he expended with a liberal hand among his friends and outsiders. Nay, more, he gave large charities for the poor, and in one hard winter there was a donation of twenty-five thousand dollars for coal, for the benefit of the suffering in his ward. Thus, three years ago he was a magnificent person, having vastly more power than Vanderbilt, or Astor, or Stewart, with riches only inferior to theirs. To-day he is almost bankrupt, with a prospect, under a definite sentence, of spending nearly a quarter of the remainder of his life in a penitentiary. To say that we are glad of it is only a repetition of our previous remarks. But we have, nevertheless, some valuable reflections, which it is worth while to record. There are other public thieves as great as Tweed, and equally deserving of punishment. Where is Boss Shepherd, of the District of Columbia? Where is Simon Cameron, of Pennsylvania? Where are the scoundrels of Mann & Co., who rule Philadelphia? Where is Grant himself? Every one has been quite as guilty as Tweed of pecuniary robberies. Will the Republicans make the same effort to bring them to an account for their transgressions as the Democrats in New York did to bring Tweed to justice?

"What is your name, little girl?" "Minnie." "Minnie what?" "Minnie Don't, that's what Mamma calls me."

"Broom handles—two car loads (82,000) just received, and for sale at depot" Another warning to husbands.

Made to "See It."

[From the New York Ledger.]

"I can't see it," said Buffer. "Nobody reads all these little advertisements. It's preposterous to think of it."

"But," said the editor, "you read what interests you?"

"Yes."

"And if there's anything that you particularly want you look for it?"

"Certainly."

"Well, among the thousands upon thousands who help to make up this busy world of ours everything that is printed is read. Sneer as you please, I do assure you that printer's ink is the true open sesame to all the business success"

And still Buffer couldn't see it. He didn't believe that one-half of those little crowded advertisements were ever read

"Suppose you try the experiment," said the LTH "Just slip in an advertis the want of one of one of t AND PUR mon things in the world. E OF FLESH of the test I will giv AR SKIN AND ious free. After a while ble to him. began to look more The more he looked at it the plainer it grew. Finally it glared at him from the closely printed page. But that was because he was the person particularly interested. Of course it would appear conspicuous to him. But it could not be so to others.

That evening Mr. Buffer was just sitting down to tea (Buffer was a plain old fashioned man, and took tea at six) when his door bell was rung. The servant announced that a man was at the door with a dog to sell,

"Tell him I don't want one."

Six times Buffer was interrupted while taking tea by men with dogs to sell: Buffer was a man who would not lie. He had put his foot in, and he must take it out manfully. The twenty-third applicant was a small boy with a girl in company, who had a ragged, dirty poodle for sale. Buffer bought the poodle of the boy, and immediately presented it to the girl, and sent them off

To the next applicant he was able truthfully to answer—"Don't want any more. I've bought one."

The stream of callers continued until near ten o'clock, at which hour Buffer locked up and turned off the gass.

On the following evening, as Buffer approached his house, he found a crowd assembled. He counted thirty-nine men and boys, each one of whom had a dog in tow. There were dogs of every grade, size and color, and growl and howl. Buffer addressed the motley multitude, and informed them that he had purchased a dog.

"Then what d'yer advertise for?"

And Buffer got his hat knocked over his eyes before he reached the sanctuary of his home.

Never mind about the trials and tribulations of that night. Buffer had no idea that there were so many dogs in existence. With the aid of three policemen he got through alive. On the next morning he visited his friend the editor and acknowledged the corn. The advertisement of "wanted" was taken out, and in the most conspicuous place, and in glaring type, he advertised that he didn't want any more dogs. And for this advertisement he paid. Then he went home and posted upon his door —"gone into the countoy." Then he hired a special policeman to guard his property, and then he locked up and went away with his family.

From that day Josephus Buffer has never been heard to express doubts concerning the efficacy of printer's ink; neither has he asked, "Who reads advertisements?"

Athens, Ga., has a paper named Cat, with the motto "I can scratch."

The best remedy for mercantile troubles—A liberal use of printer's ink.

A Mother's Boy.

"Is there a vacant place in the bank which I could fill?" was the inquiry of a boy, as, with a glowing cheek, he stood before the manager.

"There is none," was the reply. "Were you told that you could obtain a situation here? Who reccommended you?"

"No one reccommended me, sir," calmly answered the boy. "I only thought I would see."

There was a straightforwardness in the manner, and honest determination in the countenance of the lad, which pleased the man of business, and induced him to continue the conversation. He said:

'You must have friends who could aid you in obtaining a situation; have you told them?'

The quick flash of the deep blue eyes was quenched in the overtaking wave of sadness, and he said, though half musingly:

"My mother said it would be useless to try without friends;" then recollecting himself, he apologized for the interruption, and was about to withdraw, when the gentleman detained him by asking why he did not remain at school for a year or two, and then enter the business world

"I have no time," was the reply. "I study at home, and keep up with the other boys"

"Then you have a place already," said his interrogator. "Why did you leave it?"

"I have not left it," answered the boy quietly

"But you wish to leave. What is the matter?"

For an instant the child hesitated; then he replied, with half reluctant frankness,

"I must do more for my moth r."

Brave words! talisman of success anywhere, everywhere. They sank into the heart of the listener—recalling the radient past. Grasping the hand of the astonished child, he said, with a quivering voice,

"My boy, what is your name? You shall fill the first vacancy for an apprentice that occurs in the bank. If, in the meantime, you need a friend, come to me. But now give me your confidence. Why do you wish to do more for poor mother? Have you no father?"

Tears filled his eyes as he replied, "My father is dead, my brothers and sisters are dead, and mother and I are left alone to help each other. But she is not strong, and I wish to take care of her. It will please her, sir, that you have been so kind, and I am much obliged to you." So saying, the boy left, little dreaming that his own nobleness of character had been as a bright glance of sunshine into that busy world he had so tremblingly entered. A boy animated by a desire to help his mother will always find friends.

The Downfall of Tweed.

We have recorded the announcement that Wm. M. Tweed has been condemned to twelve years imprisonment in the County Jail of New York and the imposition of a fine of $12,000. Since the fall of Cardinal Wolsey, in the time of Henry VIII., there has not been such a decline from enormous fortune as in the instance stated above. It is sudden and startling. Four years ago no man exercised the influence in New York, or begun to exercise it like Mr. Tweed. He was the chief manager of Tammany Hall, and through it run the Democratic organization, which, by a majority of tens of thousands, controlled the city It is well to state here some facts peculiar to New York. Tammany Hall has been in existence for three-quarters of a century. It was a building originally which was owned by leading Democrats. It was made the center of political operations. The Sachems—for in it there was a society which was based upon Indian customs—had the disposion of the Hall, and upon them devolved the calling of all Democratic Conventions and meetings. Thus, in this close corporation, which is continued to this day, is vested the regulation of all Democratic movements and the choice of all its delegates and candidates It has been recognized by all Democratic State and National Conventions. To control it was virtually to control the party. Mr. Tweed, who was originally a small tobacco merchant, from which he had graduated from the lower class of society, by his ability and perseverance succeeded in placing his fortune upon a firm footing. He was the embodiment of Tammany Hall, of the Democratic organization, and, therefore, of the city of New York. It was no idle compliment or partisan malice or exageration which, in municipal affairs, characterized him "Boss." He was so truly. The members of the Legislature for some years were his own creation. The Judges were his tools, and could be relied upon for any judgment that he might dictate. He and the leading associate in his ring. Mr. Sweeny, formerly the editor of the New York Mercury, were elected, with Gould and Fisk, as the controllers of the Erie Railroad. They managed it as they chose, and when its real owners made application to the Courts for restraint, the Courts of New York (Tweed's Courts) denied it to them. Every thing for years went on swimmingly: Immense stealings were going on. That railroad and the city were being run in debt, but it was carefully concealed. It is true the members of the ring were becoming rich. About four years ago Mr. Tweed's daughter was married to a gentleman in New Orleans. The expenses of the wedding and the presents to the bride exceeded those of the marriage of the daughter of Queen Victoria to the son of the Duke of Argyle, the wealthiest nobleman in Scotland. This was often made the subject of comment and congratulation by Mr. Tweed, the happy father-in-law. For some years previous to his overthrow it was the habit of Mr. Tweed's friends, political and personal, to celebrate the event by a meeting at his stable on Fifth Avenue. He lived down town in a Senatorial district where his majority for the State Senate could always be counted upon for at least twenty thousand. To move to Fifth avenue was therefore a prospective design. But upon the ba[illegible] of his magnificent lot he constructed [illegible] edifice for his horses, which cost mor[e] than a hundred thousand dollars. H[e] therefore, entertained them there, and at the repast had, in order to have all things fitting, the champaign placed in the horse buckets filled with ice. A friend of his, now a resident in New York, happened to be in Albany [illegible] evening, in the course of the legi[illegible] of 1870 and 1871, and proceeded [illegible] call upon him at his hotel. Wh[illegible] there the servants came in and set the tables for a magnificent banquet, which was attended by sixty or seventy persons, all of high consideration, either as members or lobbyists, of both parties. Upon his old friend congratulating him upon his good luck in being present when he was giving a dinner to his friends, the "Boss" replied that there was nothing in that, for he could not have come amiss; that every evening in the session there was exactly the same entertainment "Why," says Tweed, "I pay the landlord here three hundred dollars a day for the session, and ought not that to embrace a night supper for me and my friends whom I am not able to see through the Legislative session?" "Mr. Tweed," said his Cincinnati, but old New York, friend, "this is a very fine hotel. What magnificent furniture you have in this suite of rooms." "Why, you are green," says Tweed; "this is my furniture; I bought it in New York, and it cost me twenty thousand dollars.'

All this indicates the character of Mr. Tweed in the days of his power and prosperity. The money he stole from the people he expended with a liberal hand among his friends and outsiders. Nay, more, he gave large charities for the poor, and in one hard winter there was a donation of twenty-five thousand dollars for coal, for the benefit of the suffering in his ward. Thus, three years ago he was a magnificent person, having vastly more power than Vanderbilt, or Astor, or Stewart, with riches only inferior to theirs. To-day he is almost bankrupt, with a prospect, under a definite sentence, of spending nearly a quarter of the remainder of his life in a penitentiary. To say that we are glad of it is only a repetition of our previous remarks. But we have, nevertheless, some valuable reflections, which it is worth while to record. There are other public thieves as great as Tweed, and equally deserving of punishment. Where is Boss Shepherd, of the District of Columbia? Where is Simon Cameron, of Pennsylvania? Where are the scoundrels of Mann & Co., who rule Philadelphia? Where is Grant himself? Every one has been quite as guilty as Tweed of pecuniary robberies. Will the Republicans make the same effort to bring them to an account for their transgressions as the Democrats in New York did to bring Tweed to justice?

"What is your name, little girl?" "Minnie." "Minnie what?" "Minnie Don't, that's what Mamma calls me."

"Broom handles—two car loads (82,000) just received, and for sale at depot" Another warning to husbands.

Made to "See It."

[From the New York Ledger.]

"I can't see it," said Buffer. "Nobody reads all these little advertisements. It's preposterous to think of it."

"But," said the editor, "you read what interests you?"

"Yes."

"And if there's anything that you particularly want you look for it?"

"Certainly."

"Well, among the thousands upon thousands who help to make up this busy world of ours everything that is printed is read. Sneer as you please, I do assure you that printer's ink is the true open sesame to all the business success"

And still Buffer couldn't see it. He didn't believe that one-half of those little crowded advertisements were ever read

"Suppose you try the experiment," said the [illegible] "Just slip in an advert[illegible] the want of one of one of them [illegible] mmon things in the world. [illegible] most co[illegible] of the test I will giv[e] For the sa[illegible] free. Two will bee in two insert[illegible] may have it jam[illegible] enough, and yo[illegible] the way nook of [illegible] into any out of [illegible] select. Two in my paper you shal[illegible] lines. Will y[illegible] ertions, of only tw[illegible] ou try it?"

Buffer said of course [illegible] he would try it. And he selected the [illegible] place where he would have it publish[illegible] ed—crowded [illegible] under the head of "W[illegible] ants." And he waited and saw a proo[illegible] of his advertisem[illegible], which a[illegible] ppeared as follows:

"Wanted—A good house [illegible] dog. Apply to J. BUFFER, 575 To[illegible] ser St., between the hours of 6 and 9 [illegible] M.

Buffer went away smiling and [illegible] nodding. On the following mornin[illegible] g he opened his paper, and after a d[illegible] al of hunting he found his advert[illegible] ement At first it did not seem at all c[illegible] nspicuous. Certainly so insigni[illegible] cant a paragraph, buried in such a wilderness of paragraphs, could n[illegible] ot attract notice. After a whi[illegible] however, it began to look more noticable to him. The more he looked at i[t] the plainer it grew. Finally it glared at him from the closely printed page. But that was because he was the person particularly interested. Of course it would appear conspicuous to him. But it could not be so to others.

That evening Mr. Buffer was just sitting down to tea (Buffer was a plain old fashioned man, and took tea at six) when his door bell was rung. The servant announced that a man was at the door with a dog to sell.

"Tell him I don't want one."

Six times Buffer was interrupted while taking tea by men with dogs to sell. Buffer was a man who would not lie. He had put his foot in, and he must take it out manfully. The twenty-third applicant was a small boy with a girl in company, who had a ragged, birty poodle for sale. Buffer bought the poodle of the boy, and immediately presented it to the girl, and sent them off

To the next applicant he was able truthfully to answer—"Don't want any more. I've bought one."

The stream of callers continued until near ten o'clock, at which hour Buffer locked up and turned off the gass.

On the following evening, as Buffer approached his house, he found a crowd assembled. He counted thirty-nine men and boys, each one of whom had a dog in tow. There were dogs of every grade, size and color, and growl and howl. Buffer addressed the motley multitude, and informed them that he had purchased a dog.

"Then what d'yer advert se for?"

And Buffer got his hat knocked over his eyes before he reached the sanctuary of his home.

Never mind about the trials and tribulations of that night. Buffer had no idea that there were so many dogs in existence. With the aid of three policemen he got through alive. On the next morning he visited his friend the editor and acknowledged the corn. The advertisement of "wanted" was taken out, and in the most conspicuous place, and in glaring type, he advertised that he didn't want any more dogs. And for this advertisement he paid. Then he went home and posted upon his door—"gone into the countoy." Then he hired a special policeman to guard his property, and then he locked up and went away with his family.

From that day Josephus Buffer has never been heard to express doubts concerning the efficacy of printer's ink; neither has he asked, "Who reads advertisements?"

Athens, Ga., has a paper named Cat, with the motto "I can scratch."

The best remedy for mercantile troubles—A liberal use of printer's ink.

THE Government has been defeated in the Credit-Mobilier suits brought at Hartford. The question of jurisdiction is decided in its favor, but the Court sustains the demurrer made to the bill presented by the Government. The ground on which the demurrer is sustained is that there was no trust in behalf of the Government which has been disregarded, and that the damage it has suffered is too remote to afford ground for action at law. An appeal to the Supreme Court is projected.

THE Credit Mobilier suits are to be appealed to the Supreme Court.

PEACE.

Spain Accedes to the Demands of the United States—Terms of the Protocol Agreed Upon—The Virginius to be Surrendered and the Remaining Captives Released.

Negotiations between the United States and Spain with regard to questions growing out of the capture of the Virginius were brought to a conclusion on the 29th ult., Secretary Fish and the Spanish Admiral Polo having signed a protocol, the terms of which are substantially as follows:

First—Immediate delivery to the United States of the ship Virginius and all the surviving passengers and crew.

Second—A salute to our flag on the 25th of December next, unless in the meantime Spain shall satisfy the United States that the American flag was improperly borne on that vessel; and further, that she had no right to the American flag or American papers. In this event, the salute is to be spontaneously withdrawn, and Spain is to formally disclaim any intentional indignity to the flag in the acts committed by Spain against the Virginius.

Third—If it shall thus be shown that the Virginius had no right to carry the American flag and papers, the United States will institute proceedings against the vessel and the surviving parties who have violated the laws of the United States, and Spain guarantees to institute proceedings against any of her authorities who may have violated either law or treaty stipulations.

Fourth—The matter of reclamations for damages is reserved for future consideration.

The words "immediate release," as applicable to the delivery of the Virginius and the surviving passengers and crew, imply, of course, a reasonable time for its execution, as some days must elapse before Havana and Santiago de Cuba can be reached.

The fixing of the 25th of December as the time of saluting our flag is to allow the necessary opportunity to Spain to show that the Virginius improperly carried the American flag and American papers.

A Madrid dispatch states that the Spanish Cabinet has agreed to deliver to the United States Government the steamship Virginius and all the persons remaining alive who were captured with her, leaving the question whether the seizure of the vessel was legal to be settled hereafter by a mixed tribunal. The question whether the damages shall be paid to the families or relatives of the men who were shot is also to be settled in a similar manner. This decision was not arrived at by the Spanish Government before it had confidentially consulted with the powers of Europe, and was informed by all of them that reparation was due for the capture of the steamer and the execution of the captives. The decision is also in conformity with the opinion of leading Spanish statesmen, of all parties, to whom the question was submitted by the Government.

A Havana telegram of the 1st inst. says there is much excitement in that city over the settlement of the difficulty, and the terms upon which it is based.

The chief authorities of the island, assembled in conference, sent a manifesto to the Spanish Government, asking it to wait until it shall have received a statement about the Virginius case, which shows the right of the capture and the justice of subsequent proceedings. The mass of the people oppose the surrender of the Virginius, or any yielding to pretensions which may dishonor the Spanish flag.

TERRIBLE DISASTER.

A New York Steamship Sunk at Sea—226 of Her Passengers Lost.

News comes from London of another terrible marine disaster. At 2 o'clock on the morning of the 23d of November, the steamship Ville du Havre, which left New York Nov. 15, for Havre, France, collided with the British ship Loch Erne, and sunk in twelve minutes. Two hundred and twenty-six passengers of the Ville du Havre were lost, eighty-seven being saved by the ship Trimountain. The ill-fated vessel was struck amidships by the Loch Erne. The latter vessel immediately lowered her boats, which rendered all the service possible by them. Fifty-three of the crew were saved, including the Captain, and those go to make up the eighty-seven saved. Among the passengers lost were several members of the late Evangelical Alliance, returning to their homes.

The Ville du Havre was one of the largest and finest steamers afloat. Her dimensions were 430 feet by 48 feet. Her carrying capacity was 3,500 tons, freight and measurement. Her main saloon was fitted up with marble wainscoting of three varieties, the upholstery was velvet, and the wood-work was carved in the most unique designs. Her engines were compound direct-acting, of 3,200 horse-power, and made in England.

Among the lost were four children of Mr. H. G. Spafford (Mrs. S. being among the saved), a son of Mr. B. F. Culver, and Mrs. Daniel Goodwin and two children—all of Chicago.

The Loch Erne struck the steamer amidships, and made a chasm 12 feet deep and from 25 to 30 feet wide. The exact position of the Ville du Havre at the time was latitude 47 degrees 21 minutes; longitude 35 degrees 41 minutes.

Panic took possession of the passengers. Five minutes after the collision the main and mizzen masts fell across two large boats which were filled with people and ready for launching. The boats were crushed to pieces, and many of the occupants killed and injured. In the brief interval between the collision and sinking of the steamer the crew were able to launch only a whaleboat and the Captain's gig.

The Loch Erne went a mile before stopping. She then got out four boats to pick up the people struggling in the water.

The Purser of the Ville du Havre, in his account of the disaster, says:

"The scene was awful, and beyond description. The air was rent with shrieks, but some were heard saying calmly, "As we must die, let us die nobly." The water rushed into the hold with incredible velocity. I undressed myself, and with a companion, jumped overboard and swam toward the Loch Erne, then half a mile distant. As I left I heard the ship cracking, and looking back saw her go down with one plunge forward. For a moment the shrieks were terrible, then all was silent. It was the silence of death. The Captain remained on the bridge of the Ville du Havre during the whole, and went down with the ship. He was picked up an hour afterward."

A Brave Man.

Whatever else may be said about Capt. Fry, the commanding officer of the ill-fated Virginius, it must be admitted that he met his fate at the hands of the Spanish butchers like a brave hearted gentleman. His demeanor under the circumstances shows that the days of knightly gallantry are not yet entirely passed away. In his last statements he has no regrets for his own fate, and wastes no time in appealing for mercy for himself. Upon this point he only says:

"The Consul knows well that I am not pleading for my own life. I have not prayed to God for it, nor even to the Blessed Mother. I have neither home nor country,—a victim of war and persecution, the avenues to the securing of property being closed to me to such a point that I have not been able to provide bread for my wife and seven children, who know what it is to suffer for the necessaries of life. My life is one of suffering, and I look upon what has happened to me as a benefit of God, and it is not for me, therefore, to ask favors of any one."

Utterly ignoring himself, his only solicitude is for his crew, who have been guilty of no offense except of working for him in navigating his vessel, and begs that his blood may be sufficient for those who had no knowledge of the crime charged upon them. With any others less brutal than the Spanish butchers, his appeal would have had influence. In his own words, they would at least have identified the victims whom they were about to sacrifice. But they were shot, and he also. Whether he were guilty of a crime or not, he at least died like a brave man and a gentleman, without a single murmur, pleading with his last words for the lives of others, and commending his soul to God. Such instances of chivalric bravery and disinterestedness are too rare nowadays to pass unnoticed.

THE VIRGINIUS AFFAIR.

The Protocol Signed by Secretary Fish and Admiral Polo de Barnabee.

Protocol of the conference held at the Department of State at Washington, on the 29th of November, 1873, between Hamilton Fish, Secretary of of State, and Rear Admiral Don Jose Polo de Barnabee, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of Spain:

The undersigned having met for the purpose of entering into a definitive agreement respecting the case of the steamer Virginius, which, while under the flag of the United States, was, on the 31st day of October last, captured on the high sea by the Spanish man-of-war Tornado, have reached the following conclusions: Spain, on her part, stipulates to restore forthwith the vessel referred to, and the survivors of her passengers and crew, and on the 25th day of December next to salute the flag of the United States. If, however, before that date Spain should prove to the satisfaction of the Government of the United States that the Virginius was not entitled to carry the flag of the United States, and was carrying it at the time of her capture without right and improperly, the salute will be spontaneously dispensed, as in such case not being necessary or requirable; but the United States will expect, in such a case, a disclaimer of an intent of indignity to its flag in an act which was committed. Further, that if, on or before the 26th of December, 1873, it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the United States that the Virginius did not rightfully carry the American flag, and was not entitled to American papers, the United States could institute an inquiry and adopt legal proceedings against the vessel, if it be found that she has violated any law of the United States, and against any of the persons who may appear to have been guilty of illegal acts in connection therewith, it being understood that Spain will proceed according to the second proposition made to Gen. Sickles, and communicated to Admiral Polo on the 29th inst., to investigate the conduct of those authorities who have infringed the Spanish laws and honorary obligations, and will arraign them before competent courts and inflict punishment on those who may have offended. Other reciprocal recommendations to be subject to the consideration and arrangement between the two governments; and, in case of no agreement, to be the subject of arbitration, if the constitutional assent of the Senate of the United States be given thereto. It is further stipulated that the time, manner and place for the surrender of the Virginius and the survivors of those who were on board of her at the time of her capture, and also the time, manner and place for the salute to the flag of the United States, if there should be occasion for such a salute, shall be subject to arrangement between the undersigned within the next two days.

(Signed) HAMILTON FISH,
JOSE POLO DE BARNABEE.

Under the Hoosac Mountain.

The Hoosac tunnel is one of the most important works, considered merely as an engineering enterprise, of the present day. A comparison of it with other tunnels is not without interest. Coming, as may be said, close upon the heels of the Mont Cenis tunnel, it is likely to be most frequently compared with that great work. The Hoosac tunnel is narrower than the Mont Cenis by less than one-twelfth; it is within eight inches of the same height; it is about two-thirds as long, and when complete will have cost about one-third more per mile. The last named fact is the more noteworthy because the Alpine tunnel had to be lined with masonry from end to end, owing to the rock being defective—having so many seams that it was not considered safe without support. The comparative hardness of the rock bored is scarcely so important in these undertakings as the question whether the material is self-sustaining; a soft and decomposing rock was a far more formidable obstacle to the Hoosac work than the harder material afterward encountered; but on the whole, the calcareous stone which formed the bulk of the Alpine mountain was at least no harder than the micaceous formations of Massachusetts. The Mont Cenis tunnel, owing to the height of the mass above it, had to be construed entirely from each of its entrances, and is deficient in the great advantage as to ventilation which the Hoosac obtains by its central shaft.

No other tunnel bears so many points of comparison with the Hoosac as that of Mont Cenis. Some of the French tunnels are, however, of great length; that on the line between Marseilles and Avignon being about three miles, and the Blaisy tunnel on the road from Paris to Lyons about two and a half miles long. One of the English tunnels is three miles in length, and some of them have encountered the most arduous and costly difficulties in engineering. The Sydenham tunnel, on the London, Chatham and Dover railway, was one of the most expensive, though cut through nothing harder than London clay; because after the cutting the clay swelled and crushed the supporting masonry. A parallel in the length of time taken by some portions of the American work is to be found in the tunnel of Arschwiller, on the line between Paris and Strasbourg; its mile and a half having consumed nearly eight years in construction; and against the one hundred and thirty-six human lives lost by accidents in the Hoosac may be set the frightful casualty in the shaft of the Havenstein tunnel on the Central Swiss railway, where the wooden lining, taking fire and giving way, fell with the surrounding earth upon sixty unfortunate workmen.—New York Tribune.

The Sinews of War.

The Treasury of the War Department of the German Empire, by a recent order, is to have on hand, at all times, $40,000,000 in coined gold. This sum is to be kept in the Julius Tower of the Citadel of Spandau, considered to be the safest place for the hoarding of so large a treasure. The doors of the tower and of the inner vaults are all secured with double locks, the key to the one being in the hands of one official, and the key to the other in those of a supervisor. The tower is constantly guarded by a detachment of troops, and the commander of the fortress of Spandau is instructed to report every event that might threaten the safety of the tower to the Minister of War, who reports to the Chancellor. Nothing can be deposited in or drawn from the treasury without an order from the Chancellor.

Tree-Culture for Profit—The Larch.

To show the profit attending the cultivation of the larch tree, in forests, the following extract from an essay read before the Northern Horticultural Society, at its session in Freeport, Ill., by W. E. Lukens, is of interest, and may perhaps open the eyes of the Western farmer to an industry more remunerative than that of raising corn at thirty cents per bushel. After saying the larch should be planted four feet apart each way, and may be procured at a cost of from $8 to $15 per thousand, Mr. Lukens adds:

"Any one who takes the pains will readily see that the expenses of fifty acres of larch for the first ten years, including interest on land worth $50 per acre, cost of plants, preparing the ground, planting, and cultivating two or three years, with ten per cent. compound interest on each investment, will amount to about $5,000. At that time three-fourths of the trees should be thinned out, leaving them eight feet apart. These, if worth fifteen cents each, will amount to over $15,000, or a clear profit of $10,000. If this sum is kept at compound interest for twenty years it will amount to $58,564, supposing it to double in every eight years. But at twenty we may cut three-fourths of the balance, or 25,312 trees, worth at that time at least $2 each, or $50,624. This at compound interest for ten years will amount to about $122,500. We then have left 8,437 trees 30 years old, worth not less than $10 per tree, or $84,370—an agregate profit of $265,064 in thirty years from fifty acres of land.

"But if you plant corn every year on fifty acres, allow it to produce forty bushels per acre, and sell it at 50 cents per bushel, allow interest on the net profit each year at compound rate for the same time, or thirty years from first planting, you will not get it higher than $60,000 or $70,000. Thus we find the trees will yield a profit of $195,054 more than the corn crop at 50 cents a bushel.

"It will be seen that in this calculation the trees at ten years are put at 15 cents each, while the probability is that they will be worth nearer 75 cents. But if each tree will make three cuts five feet long, a good fence can be made by inserting them one foot into the ground, nine inches apart, and nailing another on the top to keep them steady. It would require eight of these poles to make a rod of fence, which at 15 cents each would only be $1.20 a rod. All can see that this is a very low estimate of the value of such poles as they will be at that age."

Oxygen as a Poison.

Oxygen, on the plentifulness of which in the air we breathe, the bounding blood of health is supposed to depend, is as fatal as a dose of strychnine, if inhaled in a condensed form. Paul Bert, a French scientist, has demonstrated this by some recent experiments with birds and animals. Placing sparrows under a pressure of three and a half atmospheres, the birds were seized with convulsions. The same results followed when sparrows were confined in common air, under a pressure of seventeen atmospheres. In oxygen, at a pressure of three and a half atmospheres, or in air at twenty-two atmospheres, the convulsions were extremely violent and soon fatal. In the latter case, the symptoms were as follows: Convulsions commenced after four or five minutes. The bird hobbles in moving about as though walking on hot coals. It then flutters its wings, falls on its back, and spins about with its claws doubled up. Death supervenes after a few such spasms. In order to produce convulsions in a dog, oxygen was found to require a pressure of three and a half atmospheres, and a pressure of five atmospheres is fatal. The amount of oxygen in the arterial blood of a dog in convulsions was found to be considerably less than twice the normal quantity. From these facts M. Bert draws startling conclusions that oxygen is the most fearful poison known.

Liberia.

The Pittsburgh Commercial says: "Mr. John W. Good left Philadelphia on Saturday to take passage for Liberia, in West Africa, on the Jasper, to sail from New York this week. Mr. Good went to Liberia in 1857 originally, and now returns in charge of the new steam coffee-hulling machine, invented by Messrs. Morris and Woodruff, of this city. The Government of Liberia has offered a reward of $5 for every 1,000 coffee trees planted, and a remarkable spirit of emulation has been awakened in parts of the young African Republic. Five acres planted in young coffee trees would yield $1,000 per annum, and the Government offers 25 acres to every emigrant family. One hundred and thirty freedmen from Georgia are expected to go out in the same vessel to settle at Brewerville, founded by the generous legacy of the late Charles Brewer, of Pittsburgh. Thousands of freedmen have applied for passage to Liberia, and as soon as the gold region beyond the present boundary of Liberia is reached, there will be probably a rush to Western Africa similar to that which peopled the gold regions of California and Australia. With coffee, sugar, cotton, and palm oil now obtainable, and gold in large quantities in prospect, there seems to be a bright future for Liberia."

Advice to a Cold-Footed Lady.

Madam, allow me to prescribe for you. I have a long experience in the management of delicate women, and believe I can give some important advice. For the present I prescribe only for your feet.

1. Procure a number of woolen stockings—not such as you buy at the store under the name of lamb's wool, that you can read a paper through, but the kind that your Aunt Jerusha in the country knits for you—thick as a board, that will keep your feet dry and warm in spite of wind and weather.

2. If you want to be real thorough change them every morning. Hang the fresh ones by the fire during the night.

3. Procure thick calf-skin boots—double uppers and triple soles—and wear them from the first day of October till the first day of May. Make frequent applications of some oil blacking.

4. Avoid rubbers altogether, except a pair of large rubber boots, that may be worn for a little time through snow drifts, or a flood of water.

5. Hold the bottoms of your feet in cold water half an inch deep, just before going to bed, for two or three minutes, and then rub them hard with rough towels and your naked hands.

6. Now, madam, go out frequently, in all weathers, and believe me, not only will your feet enjoy a good circulation in the lower extremities, but your head will be relieved of all its fullness, and your heart of its palpitations. Your complexion will be greatly improved, and your health made better in every respect.—Dr. Dio Lewis.

Paper and Its Uses.

The St. Louis Democrat asks the question: "What becomes of all the paper manufactured in the world?" and then says: We put our Commissioner of Statistics at work upon this problem, and the following statement contains the result of his investigations: The world contains about 1,300,000,000 of human beings, and of these 360,000,000 have no knowledge of printing materials; 500,000,000, those of Mongolian extraction, use a paper prepared from leaves and plants; 10,000,000, Ethiopians, Indians and Australians, use wooden tablets; 130,000,000 of Persians, Hindoos, Armenians, Syrians, etc., use paper made of cotton; about 300,000,000 use the common article of paper made of rags, straw, etc. The average consumption for each individual of this last number is six pounds per annum, making a total of 1,800,000,000 pounds. The rate of progress of journalism, the book trade, and the intellectual advancement of the paper-consuming people of the earth, may be estimated from the fact that within the last fifty years the annual per capita consumption of paper has increased from two and one-half to six pounds. The material for this vast quantity of paper is drawn from a variety of sources, there being consumed in its manufacture about 200,000,000 pounds of woolen rags, 800,000,000 pounds of cotton rags, besides a vast quantity of linen rags, straw, wood and other material. In order to convert this material into paper, there are used 750,000,000 pounds of chemicals, starch, gums, oils, etc,, and 4,500,000,000 pounds of coal. Then there are 3,960 paper-mills, representing capital of altogether about $200,000,000. These mills give employment to about 90,000 male and 180,000 female laborers. Of the 1,800,000,000 pounds of paper manufactured, there is used for Royal Grief.

The London correspondent of the New York Sun describes some of the extraordinary manifestations of the Queen's grief at the death of Prince Albert, as follows: "She had the arm of the late Prince Albert modeled in wax and clothed, and would pass hours sitting with it drawn through hers, absorbed in melancholy reflections recalling the past. The apartments of the deceased were kept in precisely the same order as that observed in his lifetime; his slippers and dressing-gown regularly aired; his clothes, boots and toilet apparatus placed as though he might come back at any moment to claim them. She slept (and sleeps) with his portraits pinned on the bed-head, and framed with immortelles beside her. Her letter paper and envelopes were so deeply bordered with black that the white space resembled a mere patch on a sable ground. Lastly, she kept all her servants in the completest mourning for a long, long time, and wanted the Prince of Wales, even after he got married and set up for himself at Marlboro' House, to do the same, which the young man flatly refused to do, and left Windsor in a huff, not returning for a considerable period. This was the beginning of frequent quarrels between them, up to the time of his dangerous illness and convalescence in 1871, which effected a reconciliation."

A Monster.

The Emperor of Abyssinia, formerly Prince of Tigre, but now rejoicing in the title of Johanni II., though professing to be a Christian and a progressive ruler, is truly an embodiment of barbarity. An English traveler states that he recently captured Abba Kassai, a pretender to the throne, filled his ears with gun cotton, which he caused to be exploded, blowing his head to atoms. The same person states that he caused the right hands and left legs of twenty-seven captives to be lopped off in his imperial presence, and then he had them taken out into the forest and abandoned to be preyed upon by the lions, tigers and panthers. Most travelers in Africa bear testimony to the fact that the rulers of African tribes have become bloodthirsty and cruel since the prohibition of the slave trade. Before that time, captives taken in war, or persons convicted of crimes against the ruler, knew no worse fate than being sold into slavery. Now they are scourged, or put to death in the most cruel forms. Cupidity is a characteristic of the negro ruler. While he could realize a price for his prisoner he was satisfied. He does not look with favor on imprisonment, as it is costly to support men in captivity. As he cannot sell his captives, and will not imprison them, he puts them out of the way.

What The Hoosac Tunnel Has Cost.

In the construction of this great work forty-three lives have been lost, as follows: By premature explorions, 27, viz.: by nitro-glycerine, 10; by common powder, 6; by giant power, 4; by qualine, 7; by explosions of the nitro-glycerine magazines, 4, viz.: 3 at the west end and 1 at the central shaft; by falling down the central shaft, 9; killed by rock falling from the brick arch at the west end Oct, 1, 1869, 1.

It is estimated that the rock taken from the tunnel and the central shaft would make a perfectly solid cube with a side of 235 feet, thus covering an acre and one-quarter of land, with a pile 235 feet high.

Rags and Stove-Pipe—A Mad Danburian.

It was some time last spring that Mrs. Coville read in a paper that idle stove pipe might be kept from rusting by filling the lengths with bits of carpet, rags, etc. After the parlor stove was taken down in May, she made a trial of the recipe by filling one of the lengths as advised. On Thursday, she being away from home, Mr. Coville conceived the idea, and a great deal of credit it reflected upon him, of putting up the stove and starting a fire in it so to surprise her when she came home. He went to work at once. He got the stove out of the closet, and put it on the right spot. Then he got down the pipe where it had been carefully laid away, and after much tribulation, succeeded in getting it together and up in place. With this much accomplished, he devoted some ten minutes to fondling his fingers and speculating on the astonishment and gratification Mrs. Coville would experience on her arrival. After this indulgence, and very pardonable it was, Mr. Coville arranged his kindling, put on a hod of coal, and applied a match. The paper blazed up at once, and then died out again, and a volume of smoke puffed into the room. Mr. Coville was surprised. He got down on his knees, and putting his mouth up very close to the grate, was preparing to establish a powerful current of air, and was just on the verge of doing it, when another puff of smoke shot out, filling his eyes and penetrating his throat and nearly blinding and strangling him. Mr. Coville rolled over once or twice to get out of the way, and, reaching his hands and knees, coughed and expostulated for some five minutes in that position; then, feeling somewhat revived and refreshed, he made a close examination of the dampers and the pipe where it connected with the stove and the chimney, but could find no solution of the mischief. He applied another match, but the smoke again rolled out in the room, and it was only by an almost supernatural jump backward that he saved himself from another strangulation. H next took all the coal out of the stove and made a thorough examination of its interior, but there was nothing unusual in its appearance. Puzzled, annoyed and angered by his ill luck, he put in more kindling replaced the coal, and again applied the match. There was another blaze—stronger than before, and an increased volume of smoke shot into the room. And it continued to come, in spite of the violent protestations he made, and he was obliged to beat an inglorious retreat, stopping in the hall to cough and wheeze and swear. When he opened the door again the room was full of smoke, and it was in the midst of it, feeling his way to the stove and coughing and screaming, Mrs. Coville found him on her arrival. The presence of the smoke, with the actions of her husband, made but one impression upon Mrs. Coville, and she promptly shouted "fire!" and started for the street, but, fortunately, was overtaken by her angered husband, and dragged back in time to prevent a scene for the neighbors. Of course, Mrs. Coville did not know what was the matter with the stove, so she said it was the way the fire was made, but seeing her husband grow white about the mouth, and observing him jump up and down, she prudently amended this opinion by substituting the pipe, and on the symptoms before mentioned continuing she hastily abandoned the pipe theory, and was about to confess that she didn't know what was the trouble, when a sudden thought struck her. "Oh!" said she; "did you take the rags out of the pipe?" "Rags!" said he, "Why, yes; I put some rage in one of the lengths to see if it would prevent it from rusting, as the paper said." "You did?" he gasped, showing very plainly by his looks that he knew one or the other of them was bereft of reason, but was not quite confident which one. "Yes," faltered Mrs. Coville, instinctively moving toward the stairs. Mr. Coville stared at her for a full minute, while Mrs. Coville carefully examined a fly over the door, and then, with a single exclamation which we will not print, he silently jerked down the pipe, and as silently pulled from the link in question sundry pieces of rag carpet, a jacket sleeve, and a night cap. As the last article made its appearance Mr. Coville felt as if he should melt in a shower of tears, but immediately changed his mind, and fell to kicking the articles about the room in a most insane manner, while Mrs. Coville precipitated herself with commendable dispatch. What Coville wants now is, to find the paper which contained that advice.—Danbury News.

Pay as You Go.

* * * If every article for consumption, as it passes from the hands of the last middle-man, were required to be paid for in cash, retrenchment would be forced upon the whole community; the business affairs of every individual would be promptly adjusted to the one prime necessity of securing the daily needs of life; extravagance would end in the household, and by consequence disappear from every department of business, and from the conduct of every pursuit. From that moment thousands of people would learn, for the first time, that many of their wants are purely fictitious, that many of their habits and appetites are unnatural, destructive of health, and wastefully extravagant. When the recent war of the rebellion broke out, regiments marched to the front, followed by long trains of baggage, regarded as essential no less to the effectiveness of the volunteers as soldiers than to their comfort and convenience as men. As the war progressed the baggage-trains fell off, but the health and strength of the men, equally with their effectiveness as soldiers, improved in inverse proportion to the dropping away of the long lines of baggage-wagons. Similarly, the entire community is afflicted with thousands of fictitious wants, which have come to be regarded as necessities to comfort, but which are, in fact, merely costly habits, fastened upon it by an absurd system of credit applied to the smallest details of daily life. Buying a necktie or a pound of sugar is a commercial transaction, to be sure; but it is a commercial transaction with which credit, properly understood and applied, should have nothing whatever to do. It is in itself a small thing, but if bought on credit tends to stimulate consumption, where it ought to be discouraged. Millions of these apparently harmless "commercial transactions" derange all the true relations between legitimate demand and supply, degrade credit, finally overthrow it altogether, and produce great monetary and trade disturbances. Said John Randolph once, in a burst of ecstacy, "I have found the philosopher's stone! Here it is: Pay as you go!"

How Long to Sleep.

The fact is, that as life becomes concentrated, and its pursuits more eager, short sleep and early rising become impossible. We take more sleep than our ancestors, and we take more because we want more. Six hours' sleep will do very well for a plowman or bricklayer, or any other men who has no exhaustion but that produced by manual labor, and the sooner he takes it after his labor is over the better. But for a man whose labor is mental, the stress of work is on his brain and nervous system, and for him who is tired in the evening with a day of mental application, neither early to bed nor early to rise is wholesome. He needs letting down to the level of repose. The longer the interval between the active use of the brain and his retirement to bed, the better his chance of sleep and refreshment. To him an hour after midnight is probably as good as two hours before it, and even then his sleep will not so completely and quickly restore him as it will his neighbor who is physically tired. He must not only go to bed later, but lie longer. His best sleep probably lies in the early morning hours, when all the nervous excitement has passed away, and he is in absolute rest.

Hardening Steel Tools, Etc.

The following secret, unpatented composition, suggested by the chemist Kulicke, has been employed with success at Saarbrucken for restoring burned steel to its primitive condition, and as it affords a peculiarly hard metal, it is also used for tempering steel tools that are too soft, or may have become so by use, as chisels, saw-blades, etc. Although rather expensive, it is really an economical treatment where large numbers of steel tools are used. Burned steel heated to a cherry red, and forged somewhat on an anvil, is plunged into a well-mixed, doughy mass (in a box near by), composed of tartaric acid, 6 ounces; cod oil, 30 ounces; charcoal powder, 2 ounces; bone black, 8 ounces; beef tallow, 10 ounces; yellow prussiate of potash, 5 ounces, and burned hartshorn, 3 ounces, and is then completely cooled in water. Steel tools are similarly treated. Small articles of cast-iron, such as wheel-boxes, axle-bearings, etc., may be successfully case-hardened by being plunged red-hot into a mixture of 10 buckets of urine, 5 pounds of whitening, and 4 pounds of salt.

A Beautiful Woman.—The perceptive faculty of women is usually keener than the same phrenological organ in men. Woman knows that beauty rather than genius is worshipped by the sterner sex. A man may talk with his lips of the latter to his lady-love, but the keenness of the woman knows that he is thinking of the former in his heart. All women have an innate desire to please their beaux. They are fond of admiration, hence one of their longings is to be beautiful. The grand secret of female beauty is health—the secret of health is the power to eat, digest and assimilate a proper quantity of wholesome food. Take Vinegar Bitters. It will cleanse the stomach, tone the vital organs, give a perfect digestion, purify the blood, clear up the complexion and produce a state of mental and physical electricity which gives symmetry of form, bright eyes, white skin, glossy hair and a genuine type of female loveliness which no cosmetic can compare with.—[Com.

Capt. Fry as an Artillery Officer.—Capt. Joseph Fry, during the war, belonged to the Confederate Mississippi squadron, and was commander of the battery at St. Charles, on White river, Ark., which fired the fatal shot into the gunboat Mound City, cutting her steam-drum, whereby Engineer William Wilcox, of Cincinnati, and over 100 others lost their lives. Capt. Fry was a graduate of the Annapolis Naval School, which he entered in 1844, and served in the United States Navy until the commencement of hostilities in 1861. He was a native of Florida.—Little Rock (Ark.) Gazette.

Sano Corpore.—The influence of the stomach on the brain should be carefully heeded. Let the stomach be in slight degree disturbed, and the entire nervous system becomes a sufferer. Bring the stomach to a healthy tone and the nervous machinery promptly resumes its perfect running order. Happily, there is no necessity for any long disarrangement of the functions of the stomach, since in Ayer's Pills we have so perfect a combination, admirably adapted for relief. They have stood the test of years, and have exhibited stomachic properties most wonderful. Their wise use, by keeping the system in perfect order, promotes longevity, and what is far better, insures the full enjoyment of the time spent here. We use them and know their value.—Florence (Kan.) Pioneer. 170

American Manufacturers at Vienna.

The well-known Mason & Hamlin Organ Company have received honors at Vienna. At the Exposition they were awarded the highest medal for the best instruments of this class in the world, and the Industrial Society of Austria has awarded them its Grand Medal and Diploma of Honor for the extraordinary excellence of their productions. This distinction has never been conferred on more than five Americans. No other American manufacturer of cabinet or parlor organs has ever succeeded in obtaining any award in competition with European makers. This is the second time the Mason & Hamlin Organ Company have come out ahead in such comparisons, as they took the first medal in Paris in 1867. This company can now produce on an average one Cabinet Organ every fifteen minutes of working time, or about 10,000 per annum.—New York World.

Prices Reduced.

The Mason & Hamlin Co., whose Cabinet Organs are unquestionably the best in the world, have just reduced their prices to correspond with depreciated values of material and labor. They are also introducing this season, a number of exquisitely beautiful styles, containing improvements of much value, effected this season.

They now offer five-octave double-reed organs, for one hundred and ten dollars, and other styles at proportionate prices, being about half the prices at which peddlers are crowding upon purchasers organs worth not half as much!—[Com.

Ayer's Ague Cure,

FOR THE SPEEDY RELIEF OF

Fever and Ague, Intermittent Fever, Chill Fever, Remittent Fever, Dumb Ague, Periodical or Bilious Fever, &c., and indeed all the affections which arise from malarious, marsh, or misasmatic poisons,

℞ Has been widely used, during the last twenty-five years, in the treatment of these distressing diseases, and with such unvarying success that it has gained the reputation of being infallible. The shakes, or chills, once broken by it, do not return until the disease is contracted again. This has made it an accepted remedy, and trusted specific, for the Fever and Ague of the West, and the Chills and Fever of the South.

Ayer's Ague Cure eradicates the noxious poison from the system, and leaves the patient as well as before the attack. It thoroughly expels the disease, so that no Liver Complaints, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Dysentery or Debility follows the cure. Indeed, where disorders of the Liver and Bowels have occurred from Miasmatic Poison, it removes the cause of them and they disappear. Not only is it an effectual cure, but, if taken occasionally by patients exposed to malaria, it will expel the poison and protect them from attack. Travelers and temporary residents in Fever and Ague localities are thus enabled to defy the disease. The General Debility which is so apt to ensue from continued exposure to Malaria and Miasm has no speedier remedy.

For Liver Complaints it is an excellent remedy.

SARSAPARILLIAN RESOLVENT

Has made the most astonishing Cures; so quick, so rapid are the changes the Body undergoes, under the influence of this truly Wonderful Medicine, that

Every Day an Increase in Flesh and Weight is Seen and Felt.

THE GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER.

Every drop of the SARSAPARILLIAN RESOLVENT communicates through the blood, Sweat, Urine, and other fluids and juices of the system the vigor of life, for it repairs the wastes of the body with new and sound material. Scrofula, Syphilis, Consumption, Glandular disease, Ulcers in the throat, Mouth, Tumors, Nodes in the Glands and other parts of the system, Sore Eyes, Strumorous discharges from the Ears, and the worst forms of Skin diseases, Eruptions, Fever Sores, Scald Head, Ring Worm, Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Acne, Black Spots, Worms in the Flesh, Tumors, Cancers in the Womb, and all weakening and painful discharges, Night Sweats, Loss of Sperm and all wastes of the life principle, are within the curative range of this wonder of Modern Chemistry, and a few days' use will prove to any person using it for either of these forms of disease its potent power to cure them.

If the patient, daily becoming reduced by the wastes and decomposition that is continually progressing, succeeds in arresting these wastes, and repairs the same with new material made from healthy blood—and this the SARSAPARILLIAN will and does secure—a cure is certain; for when once this remedy commences its work of purification, and succeeds in diminishing the loss of wastes, its repairs will be rapid, and every day the patient will feel himself growing better and stronger, the food digesting better, appetite improving, and flesh and weight increasing.

Not only does the Sarsaparillian Resolvent excel all known remedial agents in the cure of Chronic, Scrofulous, Constitutional, and Skin diseases; but it is the only positive cure for

Kidney and Bladder Complaints,

Urinary and Womb diseases, Gravel, Diabetes, Dropsy, Stoppage of Water, Incontinence of Urine, Bright's Disease, Albuminuria, and in all cases where there are brick-dust deposits, or the water is thick, cloudy, mixed with substances like the white of an egg, or threads like white silk, or there is a morbid, dark, bilious appearance, and white bone-dust deposits, and when there is a pricking, burning sensation when passing water, and pain in the Small of the Back and along the Loins.

The Auburn Courier

Thursday Dec., 11, 1873.

Col. Bristow, of Kentucky, has been tendered the Attorney Generalship in place of Williams, promoted to Chief Justice of the Supreme Court.

* * *

There are ominous signs that a great deal of work similar to that performed by the Credit Mobilier Committee will be done at the present session of Congress.

* * *

What has become of those frisky fellows who wanted to raise regiments of soldiers to fight, bleed and die for the glory of the country and Brigadier Generals' commissions?

* * *

Congressman Shanks has just sold to Billy Williams a $15,000 piece of property in Washington. A few years since Congressman Shanks could not pay for a suit of clothes he purchased of an honest tailor in Indianapolis. "Grab!"

* * *

The great lobby campaign in Washington is now to be opened. It is a big thing. Never did an army take the field against the Treasury so well provided with engineers, staff officers, horse, foot, dragoons, artillery, paymasters, and commissary wagons.

* * *

The most non-committal public document ever spread upon the records of the American Congress is the present message of his excellency U. S. Grant. It is very suggestive—suggests everything, but does not recommend anything. He "straddle-bugged" all the important questions that are at present exciting the public.

* * *

The public debt increased $9,000,000 in the month of November. It pains us to observe that the people were mistaken last fall when they supposed that Gen. Grant was steadily engaged in the playful duty of liquidating Uncle Samuel's embarrassing indebtedness.

* * *

Are the immense preparations for war now making in the navy yards and in private shipbuilding establishments to be taken as evidence that the Administration expect war? Or are they merely jobs put up by the easy going and plundering Secretary for the purposes of public imposture and private enrichment?

* * *

Senator Casserly, of California, has resigned. Senator Casserly was one of the leading Democrats in the United States Senate, and his unlooked for resignation has created great excitement among the politicians of the Golden State. His reasons for resigning are ill health and pressing private business. It is not determined who will be his successor.

* * *

The forty-third Congress met and organized last Monday. Speaker Blain was re-elected for the third time and nearly all the old officers were rechosen. The Senate and house both appear to be favorable to a repeal of the salary grab law, so far as it applies to Congressmen, and it is probable that there will be an early repeal of the obnoxious measure. Vice President Wilson has sufficiently regained his health to preside over the Senate.

* * *

The Indianapolis Journal says that the character of the President has never been more conspicuously illustrated than it is being at present. Reticent, reserved, patient under calumny and unmoved by detraction, he never fails when an emergency comes to prove himself equal to the situation. He is a man of action, not words. Yes, he proved himself equal to the situation, and his actions spoke louder than words when he signed the salary grab. And as to his modesty, it was simply superb.

* * *

The following gentlemen are the newly elected officers of the Grand Lodge of Odd Fellows of Indiana.

R. W. Grand Master, Richard Owen, of Lafayette.

R. W. Deputy Grand Master, D. B, Shideler, of Jonesboro.

R. W. Grand Warden, J. B. Kimball, of Kendallville

R. W. Grand Secretary, B. F. Foster, of Indianapolis.

R. W. Grand Treasurer, T. P. Haughey, of Indianapolis.

Grand Rep. G. L. United States, Platt J. Wise, of Fort Wayne.

Alternate Grand Rep. G. L. United States, W. B. Myers, of Anderson.

The press of the country is almost unanimous against the confirmation of Attorney General Williams as Chief Justice of the United States, from his want of ability as a lawyer and his general disqualification. The Hartford (Conn.) Courant, the Administration paper of the State, says: "Certainly, no one who heard the Attorney General argue the Credit Mobilier case in Hartford would have selected him as the fittest man in learning and culture for the highest judicial position in the nation." Yet, despite his unfitness, we shall be agreeably disappointed if he is not confirmed.

* * *

The public will be gratified to learn that President Grant's stables at his Missouri farm are in a thriving condition, having escaped any serious consequences from the epizootic. There are twenty-two horses there at present, and more are on their way thither. The President's stable manager, William Elrod, who had been in his employ for seven years, recently asked for an advance in salary, without making any claims for increased back pay, however; but the audacious demand was at once rejected by Gen. Grant, who detests greediness. A successor at $780 a year was speedily found to the unconscionable Elrod.

* * *

The Political Complexion of Congress.

The forty-third Congress, whose first session commenced on Monday last, is even more thoroughly Radical than any of its predecessors, as will be seen by the figures given below.

SENATE.

Radicals	49
Democrats	16
Liberal Republicans	5
Total	79

A full Senate consists of 74 members. There is one contested seat that of Pinchback, of Louisiana. The Radicals will need his vote in order to have control of a two-thirds vote.

HOUSE.

Republicans	191
Democrats	87
Liberal Republicans or Ind	4
Contested seats	10
Total	292

As two-thirds of 292 is 195 members, this gives the Republican party an assured two-thirds majority for suspension of the rules, &c., in case four out of the ten contested seats are awarded to Republican claimants, as they are pretty sure to be.

There is certainly no excuse that the Radiaals have not a fair working majority for the passage of any measure which may be desired. We shall see whether the measures of reform promised will be carried out. No dodging.

* * *

How the Democratic party is down on the "salary grabbers!" Terrible. The honesty of their professions was illustrated in the selection of candidates for organizing the House. The leading candidates for speaker, were Sunset Cox and Fernando Wood. A friend of Mr. Cox introduced a resolution that no Credit Mobilier or salary grabber should be chosen, but the motion was promptly voted down, and Fernando Wood, the champion secessionist and corruptionist, a chum and co-worker of Boss Tweed, Credit Mobilier and salary grabber, was chosen as the representative man of the Democratic party, for Speaker of the House of Representatives! How is that for reform? Actions speak louder than words. "Hurrah for Democratic reform!"

The above comes from the Kendallville Standard, a paper that has apologized for and endorsed the salary steal, and the editor of which holds a government office. He can see the imperfection of a Democrat, but he never sees the beam in his own eye. Let him read the following:

The members of the last Congress, whose names were connected with the Credit Mobilier transactions, who held chairmanships, and who were re-elected, are Samuel Hooper, of Boston, (holding 2 chairmanships,) who owned about three-quarters of a million of dollars, at par, in Credit Mobilier stock; H. L. Dawes, James A. Garfield, Glenni W. Scofield, William D. Kelly and James G. Blaine.

The persons who voted "yea" upon the final report of the salary grab, and who were chairmen of committees in the last Congress, and who are re-elected, are,

Yeas—B. F. Butler, chairman on the committee of the revision of the laws, and second upon the committee on foreign affairs; Clinton L. Cobb, of North Carolinia, chairman of the committee on freedmen's affairs; James A. Garfield, chairman of the committee on appropriations; Frank Morey, chairman of the select committee on the Mississippi levees; L. Myers, chairman of the committee on patents; John P. C. Shanks, chairman of the committee on Indian affairs; Lionel A. Sheldon, chairman of the committee on the militia; J. M. Wilson, of Indiana, chairman of a committee on Credit Mobilier; Alexander S. Wallace, chairman of the committee on revolutionary claims; William Williams, of Indiana, chairman of the committee on expenditures of the war department.

Actions speak louder than words "Hurrah for Republican Reform!"

* * *

George H. Williams was Judge of the First District Court of Iowa from 1847 to 1853, six yeaas. The Albany Law Journal states that during this period nearly one-half of his decisions were reversed by the Supreme Court of the State.

* * *

If Horace Greeley were President, is there any man living fool enough to imagine he could make such a nomination as that of George H. Williams to the great office of Chief Justice? Even after he had become crazy he could not have been induced to do so improper a thing.

* * *

One of the latest inovations in Washington is to be seen in the House of Representatives, where a special part of the gallery has just been set aside for the families of members of Congress exclusively, in imitation of and near that assigned to the diplomatic body. If this separation from the people means anything, it is an attempt to draw a line of distinction, to set up a superior class, and to look down upon the constituency. This is the sort of republicanism which the so-called Republican party practices at Washington, and it is a very bad sort.

A Magnificent send Off!

THE CORN CITY AHEAD.

Not contented with the grand excursion to Logansport a few weeks ago, Toledo must needs find a pretext to invite a return visit from her Hoosier friends, and accordingly, our Logan friends were requested to arrange that affair for Tuesday of last week. Over two hundred invitations were accepted including a small number from each town along the line.—But seven tickets were sent to this place by those getting up the excursion and it was a very delicate matter for the director of the road here to name the seven. We accompained the excursion, not as one of the seven, but from a special invitation to the Press, and Mr. Davis did not even include himself, prefering to run the risk of paying his fare. Perhaps there are some that may feel slighted, but when they come to understand that Auburn had nothing to do with it, and that only seven could go, they will find no reason to complain. When the train reached Butler, the band there got aboard, and a telegrame sent to Mr. Wright for authority to pass them through, which was done.

Arriving at Wauseon a carful of leading citizens met us with their best band. At Toledo a procession was formed and escorted to the Boody House by the spendid fire department of the city. Here Mayor Jones of the city of Toledo greeted the visitors with an elegant address of welcome which was ably responded to by Mayor McFadden, of Logansport. Mr. Collins, Gen. Lee Dr. Edwards and several others made short speeches, when dinner was announced and the large crowd sat down to as fine a dinner as one could desire. Early in the evening every one sought their own way of enjoyment, and it was startling to observe the singular unanmity of taste, and judgment. Every body went to the Theater Comique presided over by that prince of good fellows, Reub Lent, formerly of this county. Reub was in the box office dealing out the paste boards as happy as a youth.

The next morning rain fell promiscuously yet many of the visitors could be seen going in every direction taking sights, and many were surprised at the size, beauty and enterprise of the city of sod corn, as it is sometimes facetiously termed. Toledo stands pre-eminent to-day as one of the foremost cities of the lakes, and is making rapid strides to take the lead.—Her vast grain trade, manufactories and numerous other industries wield a powerful influence in the commercial transaction of the day and forms the base for a city of magnificent proportions. We have not time to mention the many acts of courtesy by her individual citizens but will sum it all up by saying that the Hoosiers were more than gratified by their reception and treatment, and a strong chain of friendship now binds the two cities in one common brotherhood, which shall be as lasting as the waters of the great lake upon whose bank our sister city is built.

We are now enabled to answer an inquiry made by the Waterloo Press, a few weeks ago relative to the safety of our county jail. It is not safe. Two of the prisoners confined there fell, through the floor and escaped. No more can our neighbor harangue us on the fact that no prisoner ever escaped from this beautiful edifice.

The press gang was well represented on the late excursion. There was Bryer, of the Journal, as clever a fellow as ever reefed a top sail, and there was Willard Nash, of the Pharos, the gentle Willard, as pursasive as ever, all from Logansport Brown of the Post and Baker of the Commercial, represented Columbia City, while Weamer of the News, tallied one for Butler, all good, genial fellows, and first class travelers.

Two Irishmen engaged in peddling packages of linen, bought an old mule to aid in carrying the bundles. Each would ride awhile, or "ride and tie" as the saying is. One day the Irishman who was on foot got to close to the heels of his muleship, when he received a kick on one of his shins. To be revenged, he picked up a stone and hurled it at the mule, but by accident struck his companion on the back of his head. Seeing what he had done, he stopped and began to groan and rub his shin.

The man on the mule turned and asked: "What's the matter?" "The cratur's kicked me" was the reply. "Be jabers," said the other, "he's did that same to me on the back of my head."

BROKE JAIL.

One Hundred Dollars Reward

Where is Sponogle.

Who is Responsible?

Last Tuesday morning it was discovered that our jail had been tampered with and it was soon ascertained that two of the prisoners therein had escaped. One of these was John Sponogle and the other was Joseph Plunkett, both charged with stealing goods from the cars of the Eel River road. Their trial was close at hand and they resolved to make an attempt for their freedom and have so far succeeded.

They made their escape by boring thro' the floor in one of the cells. The subtereanean beauties of this edifice were only revealed after their escape. A deep pit exists under the floor which aided them materially in escaping. They seem to have went through the foundation wall easily. Chapman, the third party, said to be an accomplice in the stealings, refused to run away, saying that he was innocent of any crime. He says the work for escape commenced last Saturday. The other two watched him closely so that he could not communicate with the Sheriff. How they obtained the auger or bit is unknown. Who is responsible for their escape? is now the question. Time and again has the Grand Jury reported as to the unfitness of this building, and yet nothing has been done. We call the attention of the proper authorities to this subject, and trust that they will be enabled to arrive at a proper solution in due time.

Sponogle has blue eyes, light hair, sandy mustache, dark coat, boots well worn, white shirt, and is 5 feet 5 inches high

Plunckett has brown eyes, dark hair and mustache, dark coat, stripped pants, worn, stripped shirt, and is 5 feet 6 inches high.

Fifty dollars each will be paid for the recapture of the above persons.

The Circuit Court is in session Judge James I. Best presiding. Baptism.—Though it was cold and icy last Sabbath, the rite of Baptism was performed on two subjects at the creek, by Elder Ward, all of this place. We suppose everybody has their notion about these things, and we have ours. But, then, there is such a dispute among religionists as to the true way that its quite bewildering. What one church points out as the path to salvation, another regards as the descent to damnation: and between the two we are reminded of the colloquy between the colored preacher and his flock, as related by Gerald Massey:

"Remember" said the African Dominie impressively "dere are two roads, only open to you, one leads to destruction, and de udder straight to perdition."

"Hold on brudder" cried one of the hearers "do dey bofe lead dat way?

"Yes" was the solemn response.

"Den" said the stricken man "under dese perplexin and difficult ciacumstances dis nigger makes tracks for de woods."

Our School.

Mr. Editor:—The winter term commenced on Monday, Dec. 1st, with every department well filled and the prospects for a pleasant and profitable session could not be better; yet, that the fullest benefits may be derived from it, it is necessary that not only teachers should put forth their best endeavors, but parents and all friends of education should lend their assistance in every possible way.

Parents, would you have your children enjoy the full and entire benefits of the school you annually support? Then teach them that first principle of manhood and womanhood—punctuality in duty. Require them to attend to duty promptly and in order. All the principles of stability and punctuality that a world of morals may endeavor to instill into the mind of pupils will avail nothing unless the little whims and chores, which daily infringe upon school hours, are dispensed or performed at the proper time.

But principles like these are not abnormal as some suppose; it is natural in children to be prompt. How many children have been discouraged rather than encouraged in punctuality. If those who habitually detain their children from school to perform some previously neglected errands, could meet, as we have met the little tearful eyes as they peep fearfully through the door after school has begun—weeping because of tardiness caused by some petty errand that might have been done either earlier, or by the parent himself; could they hear assertions like this: "Its no use for me to try to be punctual for I've always something to keep me late," they might then see how fruitless are the efforts of teachers to form habits of promptness in their children so long as they do not co-operate.

Friends, would you gladden the teacher's heart, and show your children that you are interested in their progress? Then visit the schools. Make it one of your first duties. Be, at least, as attentive to it as you are to the rise and fall of Bank stocks, or the condition of your sheep and cattle.

It ever has been and will be the constant aim of all the teachers, to make the school not only a pleasant place, but also one of interest, yet we fail in a certain degree, unless we have your constant sympathy and indulgence. When we consider the fact that only a few persons visited the schools of this place during the last term, most of whom were strangers, we are led to the conclusion that education is poorly esteemed, or second to all else, or that the labors of the teachers are not appreciated. Which are we to suppose? If the first or second, it is time we awake the duty while it is called to-day, ere the golden moments have passed forever into oblivion, leaving naught but the painful thought that "the world is no better for our having lived in it." If the last supposition, it is, to say the least, no charming thought.

One of the express commands of God is, "get wisdom, get industry."

The great book of nature lies open before us, inviting us to search out its truths and enjoy its vast treasures that lie hidden beneath her sacred altars. The Creator has placed the means of education within our power, and if we do not improve them, we sin against our maker. * * * Now we invite every one interested in school to lend a helping hand, a sympathizing heart and your advice constantly, and instead of standing aloof and complaining because everything does not "go to suit you," come and see for yourselves, and perhaps you will find that reports are not always true. Our government parental yet firm, lenient yet exact, and in all cases we will be governed by the same principals that we teach.

MARRIED.

Fisher—Foster.—On Monday evening, Nov. 24th, at the Presbyterian church in Findlay, Ohio, by the Rev. Eben Muse, Rev. J. Emory Fisher and Miss Linda E. Foster.

We have received a tribute of remembrance from the above happy pair, and heartily wish them a rich store of earth's choicest blessings. May our friend ever Foster his beautiful bride as in the halcyon days of their honey moon, and may she look upon her Fisher-man as her ideal of all that is good and lovable here below.

Do Not! Do Not!! Do Not!!!

Do not employ such physicians as give you opium laudanum, morphine or hydrate of chloral to stop your pain or cough, as those narcotics will not cure the disease, but only lull you to certain death with a false hope. But call or send to Dr. S. Clay Todd, No. 4 East Columbia street, Fort Wayne, who will give you immediate relief by removing the cause of the disease, and there will be no more pain, and you will rapidly recover your full health and strength.

It is quite possible that Ryan and his friends on the Virginius were "filibusters," but there is an opinion in this country that a filibuster, engaged in lending a helping hand to people who are trying to throw off tyranny, is about as good and quite as respectable as a Spanish barbarian.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE

Our Relations with Foreign Powers in a Satisfactory Condition.

The Spanish Difficulty in Course of Peaceable and Honorable Adjustment.

The Financial and Other Questions of Interest Discussed.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

The year that has passed since the submission of my last Message to Congress has, especially the latter part of it, been an eventful one to the country. In the midst of great national prosperity a financial crisis has occurred that has brought low fortunes of great proportion. Political partisanship has almost ceased to exist, especially in the agricultural regions; and the capture on the high seas of a vessel bearing our flag has at one time threatened the most serious consequences and excited the public mind from one end of the country to the other. This, happily, now is in the course of satisfactory adjustment, honorably to both nations concerned.

The relations of the United States, however, with most of the other nations continue to be friendly and cordial. With France, Germany, Prussia, Italy and the minor powers, with Brazil and most of the South American Republics and with Japan, nothing has occurred during the year to demand special notice. The correspondence between the Department of State and various diplomatic representatives in or from those countries is transmitted herewith.

In executing the will of Congress, as expressed in its joint resolution of the 14th of February last, and in accordance with the provisions of the resolution, a number of practical artisans and scientific men and of honorary Commissioners were authorized to attend the Exposition at Vienna as Commissioners on the part of the United States. It is believed that we have obtained the object which Congress had in view when it passed the joint resolution, in order to enable the people of the United States to participate in the advantages of the International Exhibition of the products of agriculture, manufactures and the fine arts to be held at Vienna. I take pleasure in adding that the American exhibitors have received a gratifying number of diplomas and medals. During the Exposition a conference was held in Vienna for the purpose of consultation on the systems prevailing in different countries for the protection of inventors. I authorized a representative from the Patent Office to be present at Vienna at the time when this conference was to take place, in order to aid, as far as he might, in securing any possible additional protection to American inventors in Europe. The report of this agent will be laid before Congress.

It is my pleasant duty to announce to Congress that the Emperor of China, on attaining his majority, received the diplomatic representatives of the Western Powers in person. An account of these ceremonies, and of the interesting discussions which preceded them, will be found in the documents transmitted herewith.

The accompanying papers show that some advance, although slight, has been made during the past year toward the suppression of the infamous Chinese coolie trade. I recommend Congress to inquire whether additional legislation be not needed on the subject.

The money awarded to the United States by the Tribunal of Arbitration at Geneva was paid by Her Majesty's Government a few days in advance of the time when it would have become payable according to the terms of the treaty. In compliance with the provisions of the act of March 3, 1873, it was at once paid into the Treasury, and used to redeem, so far as it might, the public debt of the United States, and the amount so redeemed was invested in a 5 per cent. registered bond of the United States for $15,500,000, which is now held by the Secretary of State, subject to the future disposition of Congress.

I renew my recommendation, made at the assembling of the last session of Congress, that a commission be created for the purpose of auditing and determining the amounts of the several direct losses growing out of the destruction of vessels and their cargoes by the Alabama and the Shenandoah, after leaving Melbourne, for which the sufferers have received no equivalent or compensation, and of ascertaining the names of the persons entitled to receive compensation for the same, making the computations on the basis indicated by the Tribunal of Arbitration at Geneva, and that payment of such losses be authorized to an extent not to exceed the awards of the Tribunal at Geneva.

By act approved on the 14th day of February, the last Congress made provision for completing, jointly with an officer or commissioner to be named by Her Britannic Majesty, the determination of so much of the boundary line between the territory of Great Britain and our own as was left uncompleted by the commissioners appointed under the act of Congress of August 11, 1856. Under the provisions of this act, the northwest water boundary of the United States has been determined and marked in accordance with the award of the Emperor of Germany. A protocol and a copy of the map upon which the line was thus marked are contained in the papers submitted here.

I also transmit a copy of the report of the Commissioners for marking the boundary line between the United States and the British possessions west of the Lake of the Woods. During the past season surveys have been made to a point 497 miles west of the Lake of the Woods, leaving about 350 miles to be surveyed, the field work of which can be completed during the next season.

The commission organized under the Treaty of Washington for the settlement and determining of the claims of citizens of either power against the other arising out of acts committed against their persons or property during the period between April 13, 1861, and April 9, 1869, made its final award on the 25th day of September last. It was awarded that the Government of the United States should pay to the Government of Her Britanic Majesty, within twelve months from the date of the award, the sum of $1,929,819 in gold. The Commission disallowed or dismissed all other claims of British subjects against the United States. The amount of the claims presented by the British Government, but disallowed or dismissed, is understood to be about $93,000,000. It also disallowed all the claims of the United States against Great Britain which were referred to it. I recommend the early passing of an act appropriating the amount necessary to pay this award against the United States. I have caused to be communicated to the Government of the King of Italy the thanks of this Government for the eminent services rendered by Count Conti as the third commissioner on this commission. With dignity, learning and impartiality he discharged the duties, requiring great labor and constant patience, to the satisfaction, I believe, of both Governments.

I recommend legislation to create a special court, to consist of three Judges, who shall be empowered to hear the claims of aliens upon the United States arising out of acts committed against their persons or property during the insurrection. The recent conference under the Treaty of Washington was confined to claims of British subjects arising during the period named in the treaty, but it is understood there are other British claims of a similar nature arising after the 9th of April, 1865, and it is known that other claims of a like nature are advanced by citizens or subjects of other powers. It is desirable to have these claims also examined and disposed of.

Official information being received from the Dutch Government of a state of war between the King of the Netherlands and the Sultan of Acheen, the officers of the United States who were near the seat of war were instructed to preserve an impartial neutrality. It is believed they have done so.

The Joint Commission, under the convention with Mexico, of 1868, having again been legally prolonged, has resumed its business, which, it is hoped, may be brought to an early conclusion.

The distinguished representative of Her Britannic Majesty at Washington has kindly consented, with the approval of his Government, to assume the arduous and responsible duties of umpire in this commission, and to lend the weight of his character and name to such decisions as may not receive the acquiescence of both the arbitrators appointed by the respective governments.

The Commissioners appointed, pursuant to the authority of Congress, to examine into the nature and extent of the forays, by trespassers from Mexico, upon the herds of Texas, have made a report, which will be submitted for your consideration.

The Venezuelan Government has been apprised of the sense of Congress in regard to the award of the joint commission under the convention of the 25th of April, 1866, as expressed in the act of the 25th of February last. It is apprehended that that Government does not realize the character of its obligations under that convention. As there is reason to believe, however, that its hesitancy in recognizing them springs, in part at least, from real difficulty in discharging them in connection with its obligations to other governments, the expediency of further forbearance on our part is believed to be worthy of your consideration.

The Ottoman Government and that of Egypt have latterly shown a disposition to relieve foreign consuls of the judicial powers which heretofore they have exercised in the Turkish dominions, by organizing other tribunals. As Congress, however, has by law provided for the discharge of judicial functions by consuls of the United States in that quarter, under the treaty of 1830, I have not felt at liberty formally to accept the present change without the assent of Congress, whose decision upon the subject at as early a period as may be convenient is earnestly requested.

I transmit herewith, for the consideration and determination of Congress, an application of the Republic of Santo Domingo to this Government to exercise a protectorate over that Republic.

Since the adjournment of Congress the following treaties with foreign powers have been proclaimed: A naturalization convention with Denmark; a convention with Mexico for renewing their claims Commission; a convention of friendship, commerce and extradition with the Orange Free State, and a naturalization convention with Ecuador.

I renew a recommendation made in my message of December, 1870, that Congress authorize the Postmaster-General to issue all commissions to officials appointed through his department.

I invite the earnest attention of Congress to the existing laws of the United States respecting extradition, and the eligibility of nationality by individuals. Many citizens of the United States reside permanently abroad, with their families. Under the provisions of the act approved February 10, 1855, the children of such persons are to be deemed and taken to be citizens of the United States, but the rights of citizenship are not to descend to persons whose fathers never resided in the United States. It thus happens that persons who have never resided within the United States have been enabled to put forward a pretension to the protection of the United States against the claim of military service of the Government under whose protection they were born and have been reared. In some cases unnaturalized citizens of the United States have returned to the land of their birth to remain there, and their children, the issue of a marriage contracted there after their return and who have never been in the United States, have laid claim to our protection, when the lapse of many years have imposed upon them the duty of military service to the only Government which had ever known them personally. Until the year 1868 it was left embarrassed by the conflicting opinions of courts and of jurists to determine how far the doctrine of perpetual allegiance derived from our former colonial relations with Great Britain was applicable to American citizens. Congress then wisely swept the doubts away by electing that any declaration, instruction, opinion, order, or decision of any officer of this Government, which denies, restricts, impairs or questions the right of expatriation, is inconsistent with the fundamental principles of this Government; but Congress did not indicate in that statute, nor has it since done so, what acts are to be deemed to work expatriation. For my own guidance in determining such questions I required, under the provisions of the Constitution, the opinion in writing of the principal officer in each of the Executive departments upon certain questions relating to this subject. The result satisfies me that further legislation has become necessary. I, therefore, commend the subject to the careful consideration of Congress, and I transmit herewith copies of the several opinions of the principal officers of the Executive Departments, together with other correspondence and prominent information on the same subject. The United States, who led the way in the overthrow of the feudal doctrine of perpetual allegiance, are among the last to indicate how their citizens may elect another nationality. The papers submitted herewith indicate what is necessary to place us on a par with other nations in liberality of legislation on this international question. We have already in our treaties assented to the principles which would need to be embodied in laws intended to accomplish such results. We have agreed that citizens of the United States may cease to be citizens, and may voluntarily render allegiance to other powers. We have agreed that residence in a foreign land, without intent to return, shall of itself work expatriation. We have agreed, in some instances, upon the length of time necessary for such intent. I invite Congress now to mark out and define when and how expatriation can be accomplished, to regulate by law the condition of American women marrying foreigners, to fix the status of children born in a foreign country of American parents residing more or less permanently abroad, and to make rules for determining such other kindred points as may seem best to Congress.

In compliance with the request of Congress, I transmitted to the American Minister at Madred, with instructions to present to the Spanish Government, the joint resolution approved on the 3d of March last, tendering to the people of Spain, in the name and on behalf of the American people, the congratulations of Congress upon the efforts to consolidate in Spain the principles of universal liberty in a Republican form of government. The existence of this Republic was inaugurated by striking the fetters from the slaves in Porto Rico. This beneficent measure was followed by the release of several thousand persons illegally sold as slaves in Cuba. Next, the Captain-General of the colony was deprived of the power to set aside the orders of his superiors at Madrid, which had pertained to the office since 1825. The sequestered estates of American citizens, which had been the cause of long and frequent correspondence, were ordered to be restored to their owners. All these liberal steps were taken in the face of violent opposition, directed by the reactionary slaveholders of Havanna, who are vainly striving to stay the march of ideas that has terminated slavery in Christendom, Cuba only excepted. Unhappily, however, this baneful influence has thus far succeeded in defeating the efforts of all liberal-minded men in Spain to abolish slavery in Cuba, and in preventing the promised reform in that island. The struggle for political supremacy continues. The pro-slavery aristocracy in Cuba is gradually arraying itself in more and more open hostility and defiance of the home Government, while it still maintains a political connection with the Republic in the peninsula, and although usurping and defying the authority of the home Government whenever such usurpation or defiance tends in the direction of oppression or of the maintenance of abuses, it is still a power in Madrid and recognized by the Government,—thus forming an element more dangerous to the continued colonial relations between Cuba and Spain than that which inspired the insurrection at Yarra. An element opposed to granting any relief from misrule and abuse, with no aspirations after freedom, commanding no sympathies in generous breasts, aiming to rivet still stronger the shackles of slavery and oppression, has seized many of the emblems of power in Cuba, and under professions of loyalty to the mother country is exhausting the resources of the island, and is doing acts which are at variance with those principles of justice, liberality, and right, which give nobility of character to a Republic. In the interests of humanity, of civilization and of progress, it is to be hoped that this evil influence may soon be averted.

The steamer Virginius was, on the 26th day of September, 1870, duly registered at the port of New York as a part of the commercial marine of the United States. On the 4th day of October, 1870, having the certificate of her register in the usual legal form, she sailed from the port of New York, and has not since been within the territorial jurisdiction of the United States. On the 31st of October last, while sailing under the flag of the United States on the high seas, she was forcibly seized by the Spanish gunboat Tornado, and was carried into the port of Santiago de Cuba, where many of of her passengers and crew were inhumanly, and so far, at least, as relates to those who were citizens of the United States, without due process of law, put to death. It is a well-established principle, asserted by the United States from the beginning of national independence, recognized by Great Britain and other maritime Powers, and stated by the Senate in a resolution passed unanimously on the 16th of June, 1858, that American vessels on the high seas, in time of peace, bearing the American flag, remain under the jurisdiction the country to which they belong, and, therefore, any visitation, molestation, or detention of such vessel by force on the part of a foreign power is in derogation of the sovereignty of the United States. In accordance with this principle, the restoration of the Virginius and the surrender of the survivors of her passengers and crew and a due reparation to the flag, and the punishment of the authorities who had been guilty of the illegal acts of violence, were demanded. The Spanish Government has recognized the justice of the demand, and has arranged for the immediate delivery of the vessel, and for the surrender of the survivors of the passengers and crew, and for a salute to the flag, and for proceedings looking to the punishment of those who may be proved to have been guilty of illegal acts of violence toward citizens of the United States, and also toward indemnifying those who may be shown to be entitled to indemnity. A copy of a protocol of a conference between the Secretary of State and the Spanish Minister, in which the terms of this arrangement were agreed to, will be transmitted herewith. The correspondence on this subject with the Legation of the United States in cipher and by cable needs the verification of the actual text of the correspondence, but it has seemed to me to be due to the importance of the case not to submit this correspondence until the accurate text can be received by mail. It is expected shortly, and will be submitted when received. In taking leave of this subject for the present, I wish to renew the expression of my conviction that the existence of African slavery in Cuba is a principal cause of the lamentable condition of the island. I do not doubt that Congress shares with me the hope that it will soon be made to disappear, and that peace and prosperity may follow its abolition. The embargoing of estates in Cuba, cruelty to American citizens detected in no act of hostility to the Spanish Government, the murdering of prisoners taken with arms in their hands, and finally the capture upon the high seas of a vessel sailing under the United States flag and bearing a United States registry, has culminated in an outburst of indignation that has seemed for a time to threaten war. Pending negotiations between the United States and the Government of Spain on the subject of this capture, I have authorized the Secretary of the Navy to put our navy on a war footing, to the extent at least of the entire annual appropriation for that branch of the service, trusting to Congress and the public opinion of the American people to justify my action.

Assuming, from the action of the last Congress in the appointing of a Committee on Privileges and Elections to prepare and report to this Congress a constitutional amendment to provide a better method of electing the President and Vice-President of the United States, and also from the necessity of such an amendment, that there will be submitted to the State Legislatures for ratification such an improvement in our condition, I suggest two others to your consideration: First, to authorize the Executive to approve of so much of any measure passing the two Houses of Congress as his judgment may dictate, without approving the whole, the disapproved portion or portions to be subjected to the same rules as now, to-wit: to be referred back to the house in which the measure or measures originated, and if passed by a two-thirds vote of the two houses, then to become a law without the approval of the President. I would add to this a provision that there should be no legislation by Congress during the last twenty-four hours of its sitting, except upon a veto, and in order to give the Executive an opportunity to examine and approve or disapprove understandingly. Second, to provide, by an amendment, that when an extra session of Congress is convened by Executive proclamation, legislation during the continuance of such extra session shall be confined to such subjects as the Executive may bring before it from time to time in writing. The advantages to be gained by these two amendments are obvious. One session in each year is provided for by the Constitution, in which there are no restrictions as to the subjects of legislation by Congress. If more are required, it is always in the power of Congress, during its term of office, to provide for sessions at any time. The first of these amendments would protect the public against the many abuses and waste of public moneys which creep into Appropriation bills and other important measures passing during the expiring hours of Congress, to which otherwise due consideration cannot be given.

The receipts of the Government from all sources for the fiscal year were $333,738,204, and the expenditures on all accounts $290,340,245, thus showing an excess of receipts over the expenditures of $43,392,959; but it is not probable that this favorable exhibit will be shown for the present fiscal year. Indeed, it is very doubtful whether, except with great economy on the part of Congress in making appropriations, and the same economy in the administration in administering the various departments of the Government, the revenues will not fall short of making the annual expenses, including the interest on the public debt. I commend to Congress such economy, and point out two sources where it seems to me it might commence, to-wit: In the appropriations for public buildings in the many cities where work has not been commenced; in the appropriations for river and harbor improvements in those localities where the improvements are of but little benefit to general commerce and fortifications. There is still more fruitful source of expenditure, which I will point out later in this message. I refer to the easy method of manufacturing claims for losses incurred in the suppression of the late rebellion. I would not be understood here as opposing the erection of good, substantial and even ornamental buildings by the Government, wherever such buildings are needed. In fact, I approve of the Goverment owning its own buildings in all sections of the country, and hope the day is not far distant when it will not only possess them, but will erect in the capital suitable residences for persons who now receive commutation for quarters or rent at the Government expense, and for the Cabinet, thus setting an example to the States which may induce them to erect buildings for their Senators; but I would have this work conducted at times when the revenues of the country would abundantly justify it.

The revenues have naturally fallen off for the last five months of the present fiscal year, from what they were expected to produce, owing to the general panic now prevailing, which commenced about the middle of September last. The full effect of this disaster, if it should not prove to be "a blessing in disguise," is yet to be demonstrated. In either event it is your duty to heed the lesson and provide by wise and well-considered legislation, as far as it lies in your power, against its recurrence, and to take advantage of all the benefits that may have accrued. My own judgment is, however much individuals may have suffered, one long step has been taken toward specie payments. That we can never have permanent prosperity until an entirely new basis is reached and maintained; until our exports, exclusive of gold, pay for our imports, interest due abroad, and other speculations so heavy as to leave an appreciable accumulation of these metals in the country from the products of our mines. The development of mines of precious metals during the past year, and the prospective development of them for years to come, are gratifying in the extreme; could but one-half of the gold extracted from the mines be retained at home, our advance toward specie payments would be rapid. To increase our exports, sufficient currency is required to keep all the industries of the country employed. Without this national as well as individual bankruptcy must ensue. Undue inflation, on the other hands, while it might give temporary relief, would only lead to an inflation of prices. The impossibility of competing in our own markets for the products of home skill and labor, and the repeated renewals of experiences give elasticity of our speculating medium therefore and just enough of it to transact the legitimate business of the country and to keep all the industries employed, is what is desired. The exact medium is specie, the recognized medium of exchange, the world over. That obtained, we shall have a currency of an exact degree of elasticity. If there be too much of it for the legitimate purposes of trade and commerce, it will flow out of the country; if too little of it, the reverse will be the result. To hold what we have, and to appreciate our currency to that standard, is a problem deserving of the most serious consideration of Congress.

The experience of the present panic has proven that the currency of the country, based as it is upon the credit of the country, is the best that has ever been devised. Usually, in times of such trials, the currency has become worthless, or so much depreciated in value as to inflate the value of all the necessaries of life, as compared with the currency. Every one holding it has been anxious to dispose of it on any terms. Now we witness the reverse. Holders of the currency hoard it as they did gold in former experiences of a like nature. It is patent to the most casual observer that much more currency or money is required to transact the legitimate trade of the country during the fall and winter months, when the vast crops are being removed, than during the balance of the year. Under the present system the amount in the country remains the same throughout the year, resulting in the accumulation of all the surplus capital of the country when not employed in the moving of crops, tempted there by offers of interest being paid. This surplus capital must earn this interest paid with a profit. Being subject to call, it cannot be loaned only in part, at best, to the merchant or manufacturer for a fixed term. Hence, no matter how much currency there might be in the country, it would be absorbed, prices keeping pace with the volume, and panics, stringency and disasters would ever be recurring with the elasticity in our money system. There is this object to be obtained first, and next, as far as possible, a prevention of the use of money in stock and other species of speculation. To prevent the latter it seems to me that one great step would be taken by prohibiting the national banks from paying interest on deposits by requiring them to hold their reserves in their own vaults, and by forcing them into resumption, though it would be only in legal tender notes. For this purpose I would suggest the establishment of clearing-houses for your consideration. To secure the former, many plans have been suggested, most of which look to me like inflation on one hand, or compelling the Government on the other to pay interest, without corresponding benefits, upon the surplus funds of the country during the seasons when otherwise unemployed. I submit for your consideration whether this difficulty might not be overcome by authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue, at any time, to nominal banks of issue, any amount of their notes below a fixed percentage of their issue, say 40 per cent., upon the banks depositing with the Treasurer of the United States an amount of Government bonds equal to the amount of notes demanded, the banks to forfeit to the Government, say, 4 per cent. on the interest accruing on the bonds so pledged during the time that they remain with the Treasury as security for the increase of circulation, the bonds so pledged to be redeemable by the banks at their pleasure, either in whole or in part, by returning their own bills for cancellation to an amount equal to the face of the bonds withdrawn. I would further suggest for your consideration the propriety of authorizing national banks to diminish their standing issue at pleasure by returning for cancellation their own bills and withdrawing so many United States bonds as are pledged for the bills returned. In view of the great actual contraction that has taken place in the currency, and the comparative contraction constantly going on, due to the increase of population, increase of manufactures and all the industries, I do not believe that there is too much of it now for the dullest period of the year. Indeed, if clearing-houses should be established, thus forcing redemption, it is a question for consideration whether banking should not be made free, retaining all the safeguards now required to secure bill-holders. In any modification of the present laws regulating national banks and a further step toward the resumption of specie payment, I invite your attention to a consideration of the propriety of exacting from them the retention, as a part of their reserve, of either the whole or a part of the gold interest accruing upon the bonds pledged as security for their issue. I have not reflected enough on the bearing this might have in producing a scarcity of coin with which to pay duties on imports, to give it my positive recommendation, but your attention is invited to the subject. During the last four years the currency has been contracted directly by the withdrawal of 3 per cent. certificates composed of interest notes and 7-30 bonds outstanding on the 4th of March, 1869, all of which took the place of legal tenders in the bank reserves to the extent of sixty-three millions of dollars. During the same period there has been a much larger comparative contraction of the currency. The population of the country has largely increased; more than 25,000 miles of railroad have been built, requiring the active use of capital to operate them; millions of acres of land have been opened to cultivation, requiring capital to remove the products; manufactories have multiplied beyond all precedent in the same period of time, requiring capital weekly for the payment of wages and for the purchase of material, and, probably the largest of all, the comparative contraction arising from the organizing of free labor in the South. Now, every laborer there receives his wages, and, for want of savings banks, the greater part of such wages is carried in the pocket or hoarded till required for use. These suggestions are thrown out for your consideration, without any recommendation that they shall be adopted literally, but hoping that the best method may be arrived at to secure such an elasticity of the currency as will keep employed all the industries of the country, and prevent such an inflation as will put off indefinitely the resumption of specie payment, an object devoutly to be wished for by all, and by none more earnestly than the class of people most directly interested—those who earn their bread by the sweat of the brow. The decision of Congress on this subject will have the hearty support of the Executive.

In previous messages, I have called attention to the decline in American ship-building. I recommend such legislation as would secure to the United States our portion of the carrying trade. Stimulated by higher rates and the abundance of freight, the progress for the last year in shipbuilding has been very satisfactory. There has been an increase of about 3 per cent. in the amount transported in American vessels over the amount of last year. With the reduced cost of material which has taken place, it may reasonably be hoped that this change will be maintained and even increased. However, as we pay about $80,000,000 per annum in foreign vessels for the transportation of our surplus products to a market, thus increased, the balance of trade is against us to this amount. The subject is one worthy of your serious consideration. Cheap transportation is a subject that has attracted the attention of both producers and consumers for the past few years, and has contributed to, if it has not been the direct cause of, the recent panic and stringency. As Congress, at its last session, appointed a special committee to investigate the whole subject during the vacation, and report at this session, I have nothing to recommend until their report is ready.

There is one work, however, of a national character, in which the greater portion of the East and the West, the North and the South, are equally interested, to which I will invite your attention. The State of New York has a canal connecting Lake Erie with tide-water on the Hudson river. The State of Illinois has a similar one connecting Lake Michigan with the navigable waters on the Illinois river, thus making water communication inland between the East and the West and the South. These great artificial water-courses are the property of the States through which they pass, and pay toll to those States. Would it not be wise statesmanship to pledge these States that if they will open these canals for the passage of large vessels, the Government will look after and keep in navigable condition the great public highways with which they connect, to-wit: The over-slough on the Hudson, the St. Clair flats, and the Illinois and Mississippi rivers? This would be a national work, one of great value to the producers of the West and South, in giving them cheap transportation for their produce to the seaboard, and a market to the consumers in the East, in giving them cheaper food, particularly of those articles of food which do not find a foreign market, and the prices of which, therefore, are not regulated by foreign demand. The advantages of such a work are too obvious for argument. I submit the subject to you, therefore, without further comment.

In further connection with the Treasury Department, I would recommend a revision and codification of the tariff laws and the opening of more mints for coining money, with authority to coin for such nations as may apply.

The attention of Congress is invited to the recommendations of the Secretary of War herewith accompanying. The apparent great cost of supporting the Academy is fully explained in the report, and it will receive your attention. While inviting your attention to all the recommendations made by the Secretary of War, there are two which I would especially invite you to consider: First, the importance of preparing for war in time of peace by providing for proper armament for our seacost defenses. Proper armament is of vastly more importance than fortifications. The latter can be supplied very speedily for temporary purposes when needed; the former cannot. The second is the necessity of reopening promotion in the staff corps of the army. Particularly is this necessity felt in the medical, pay and ordnance departments. At this time it is necessary to employ by contract surgeons to supply the necessary medical attention required by the army. With the present force of the Pay Department, it is now difficult to make the payments to troops provided for by law. Long delays in payments are productive of desertions and demoralization, and the law prohibits the payment of troops by other than regular army paymasters. There are now sixteen vacancies in the Ordnance Department, thus leaving that branch of the service without sufficient officers to conduct the business of the different arsenals on a large scale, if ever required.

During the past year our navy has been reduced by the sale of some vessels no longer fit for naval purposes, and by the condemnation of others not yet disposed of. This, however, has been more than compensated for by the repair of six of the old wooden ships, and by the building of eight new sloops-of-war authorized by the last Congress. The building of these latter has occurred at a doubly fortunate time. They are about being completed, when they will possibly be much needed, and the work upon them has not only given employment to thousands of men, but, no doubt, has been the means of keeping open establishments of other works at a time of great financial distress. Since the commencement of last month, however, the distressing occurrences which have taken place in the waters of the Caribbean sea, along our very seaboard, while they illustrate most forcibly the necessity always existing that a nation situated like ours should maintain in a state of efficiency a navy equal to its responsibilities, has at the same time demanded that all of the effective force we really have shall be put in immediate readiness for warlike service. This has been and is being done promptly and effectively, and I am assured that all the available ships and every authorized man of the American navy will be ready for whatever action is required for the safety of our cities or the maintenance of our honor. This, of course, will cause the expenditure of some of the appropriations which were calculated to extend through the fiscal year: but Congress will, I doubt not, understand and appreciate the emergency, and will provide adequately, not only for the present preparation but for the future maintenance of our naval force. The Secretary of the Navy has during the past year been putting some of our most extensive monitors in condition for service, and thus the exigency finds us in a much better condition for war than we could possibly have been without his action.

A complete exhibit is presented in the accompanying report of the Postmaster General of the operations of the Postoffice Department during the year.

The ordinary postal revenues for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1873, amounted to $22,996,771.57, and the expenditures of all kinds to $29,084,945.67. The increase of revenues over 1872 was $1,081,315.20, and the increase in expenditures $24,657,336. Independent of the payments made from special appropriations for mail steamship lines, the amount drawn from the general Treasury to meet deficiencies was $52,654,700. The constant and rapid extension of our postal service, particularly upon railways, and the improved facilities for the collection, transmission, distribution and delivery of the mails, which are constantly being provided, account for the increased expenditures of this popular branch of the public service. The total number of postoffices in operation on the 30th of June, 1873, was 33,244, a net increase of 1,381 over the number reported the preceeding year. The number of Presidential offices was 1,363, an increase of 163 during the year.

The total length of railroad mail routes at the close of the year was 63,457, an increase of 5,546 miles over the year 1872. Fifty-nine railway postoffice lines were in operation on the 30th of June, 1873, extending over 14,836 miles of railroad routes, and performing an aggregate service of 34,925 miles daily.

The number of letters exchanged with foreign countries was 27,459,185, an increase of 3,096,685 over the previous year, and the postage thereon amounted to $2,021,310.86, and the total weight of correspondence exchanged in mails with European countries exceeded 912 tons, an increase of 92 tons over the previous year. The total cost of the United States ocean mail steamship service, including $735,000 paid from special appropriations to subsidized lines of mail steamers, was $104,727,135. New or additional postal conventions have been concluded with Sweden, Norway, Belgium, Germany, Canada, Newfoundland, and Japan, reducing postage rates on correspondence exchanged with those countries, and further efforts have been made to conclude a satisfactory postal convention with France, but without success.

I invite the favorable consideration of Congress to the suggestions and recommendations of the Postmaster-General for an extension of the free-delivery system in all cities having a population of not less than 10,000; for the prepayment of postage on newspapers and other printed matter of the second class; for a uniform postage and limit of weight on miscellaneous matter; for adjusting the compensation of all Postmasters appointed by the President by the old method of commissions on the actual receipts of the office, instead of the present mode of fixing the salary in advance upon special returns; and especially do I urge favorable action by Congress on the important recommendation of the Postmaster-General for the establishment of United States postal savings depositories.

Your attention is also again called to a consideration of the question of postal telegraphs and the arguments adduced in support thereof, in the hope that you may take such action in connection therewith as in your judgment will most contribute to the best interests of the country.

Affairs in Utah require your early and special attention. The Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of Clinton vs. Englebrecht, decided that the United States Marshal of the Territory could not lawfully summon jurors for the District Courts, and those courts held that the Territorial Marshal should faithfully perform that duty because he is elected by the Legislative Assembly, and not appointed, as provided for in the act organizing the Territory. All proceedings of law are practically abolished by these decisions, and there have been but few or no jury trials in the District Courts of that Territory since the last session of Congress. Property is left without protection by the courts, and crimes go unpunished. To prevent anarchy there it is absolutely necessary that Congress should provide the courts with some mode of obtaining jurors, and I recommend legislation to that end; and also that the Probate Courts of the Territory now assume to issue writs of injunction and habeas corpus and to try criminal cases, and in questions as to land titles be denied all jurisdiction not possessed ordinarily by courts of that discription.

I have become impressed with the belief that the act approved March 2, 1867, entitled "An Act to Establish a Uniform system of Bankruptcy Throughout the United States," is productive of more evil than good. At this time many considerations might be urged for its total repeal, but if this is not considered advisable I think it will not be seriously questioned that those portions of said act providing for what is called "involuntary bankruptcy" operate to increase the financial embarrassment of careful and prudent men, who very often become involved in debt in the transaction of their business, and though they may possess ample property, if it could be made available for that purpose, to meet all their liabilities, yet on account of the extraordinary scarcity of money they may be unable to meet all their pecuniary obligations as they become due, in consequence of which they are liable to be prostrated in their business by proceedings in bankruptcy at the instance of unrelenting creditors. People are now so easily alarmed as to monetary matters that the mere filing of a petition in bankruptcy by an unfriendly creditor will necessarily embarrass and oftentimes accomplish the financial ruin of a responsible business man. Those who otherwise would make lawful and just arrangements to relieve themselves from difficulties produced by the present stringency in money are prevented by their constant exposure to attack and disappointment by proceedings against them in bankruptcy; and, besides, the law is made, in many cases, by obdurate creditors, to frighten or force debtors into a compliance with their wishes and into acts of injustice to other creditors and to themselves. I recommend that so much of said act as provides for involuntary bankruptcy on account of the suspensoin be repealed.

The policy inaugurated toward the Indians at the beginning of the last Administration has been steadily pushed, and, I believe, with beneficial results. It will be continued with only such modification as time and experience may demonstrate as necessary with the encroachments of civilization upon the Indian reservations and hunting-grounds. Disturbances have taken place between the Indians and whites during the past year, and probably will continue to do so until each race appreciates that the other has rights which must be respected. The policy has been to collect the Indians as rapidly as possible on reservations, and, as far as practicable, within what is known as the Indian Territory, and to teach them the arts of civilization and self-support. Whenever found off their reservations and endangering the peace and safety of the whites, they have been punished, and will continue to be for like offenses. The Indian Territory, south of Kansas and west of Arkansas, is sufficient in area and agricultural resources to support all the Indians of the Rocky mountains. In time, no doubt, all of them, except a few who may elect to make their homes among white people, will be collected there. As a preparatory step for this consummation, I am now satisfied that a territorial form of government should be given them, which will secure the treaty rights of the original settlers and protect their homesteads from alienation for a period of twenty years.

The operations of the Patent Office are growing to such magnitude, and the accumulation of material is becoming so great, that the necessity for more room is becoming obvious day by day. I respectfully invite your attention to the reports of the Secretary of the Interior and Commissioner of Patents on this subject.

The business of the General Land Office exhibits a material increase in all its branches during the last fiscal year. During that time there were disposed of out of the public lands 13,039,606 acres, being an amount greater by 1,165,631 acres than was disposed of during the preceding year. Of the amount disposed of, 1,626,266 acres were sold for cash; 214,940 acres were located with military land warrants; 3,793,612 acres were taken for homesteads; 653,446 acres were located with Agricultural College scrip; 6,803,536 acres were certified by railroads; 765,756 acres were granted to wagon roads; 238,548 acres were approved to States as swamp lands; 138,681 acres were certified for agricultural colleges, common schools, universities and seminaries; 190,775 acres were approved to States for internal improvements, and 14,222 acres were located with Indian scrip. The cash receipts during the same time were $3,408,515.50, being $190,415.50 in excess of the receipts for the previous year. During the year 30,488,132 acres of public land were surveyed, an increase of the amount sprveyed the previous year of 1,037,193 acres, and, added to the area previously surveyed, aggregates 616,554,895 acres which have been surveyed. The increased and steadily increasing facilities for reaching our unoccupied public domain and for the transportation of surplus products, enlarging the available field for desirable homestead locations, thus stimulating settlement and extending year by year, in a gradually increasing ratio, the area of occupation and cultivation.

There was paid during the last fiscal year for pensions, including the expenses of disbursement, $29,185,289.62, being an amount less by $934,050.98 than was expended for the same purpose the preceding year. Although this statement of expenditures would indicate a material reduction in the amount, compared with the preceding year, it is believed that the changes in the pension laws made at the last session of Congress will absorb that amount the current year. At the close of the last fiscal year there were on the pension rolls 99,804 invalid military pensioners and 112,088 widows, orphans and dependent widows of deceased soldiers, making a total of that class of 211,892; 18,266 survivors of the war of 1812, and 5,053 widows of soldiers of that war pensioned under the act of Congress of February 14, 1871, making a total of that class of 23,319; 1,430 invalid navy pensioners, and 1,770 widows and orphans and dependent relatives of deceased officers, sailors and marines of the navy pensioners, of 3,200; total of pensioners of all classes, 238,411, showing a net increase during the fiscal year of 6,218. The names of 1,645 pensioners were added to the rolls, and 10,223 names were dropped therefrom for various causes. The system adopted for the detection of frauds against the Government in the matter of pensions has been productive of satisfactory results, but legislation is needed to provide, if possible, against the perpetrating of such frauds in future.

The ninth census has been completed, the report thereof published and distributed, and the working force of the Bureau disbanded. The Secretary of the Interior renews his recommendation for a census to be taken in 1875, to which subject the attention of Congress is invited. The original suggestion in that behalf has met with the general approval of the country, and, even if it be not deemed advisable at present to provide for a regular quinquennial census, a census taken in 1875, the report of which could be completed and published before the 100th anniversary of our national independence, would be especially interesting and valuable as showing the progress of the country during the first century of our national existence. It is believed, however, that a regular census every five years would be of substantial benefit to the country, inasmuch as our growth hitherto has been so rapid that the results of the decennial census are necessarily unreliable as a basis of estimates for the later years of the decennial period.

In three successive messages to Congress, I have called attention to the subject of civil service reform. Action has been taken so far as to authorize the appointment of a board to devise rules governing the methods of making appointments and promotions; but there never has been any action on these rules, or any rules pending, or even entitled to observance. Where persons desire the appointment of a friend, or the removal of an official who may be disagreeable, to have any change effected, they must have the acquiescence of Congress as well as of the Executive. I recommend, therefore, the subject to your attention, and suggest that a special committee of Congress might confer with the Civil Board during the present session, for the purpose of devising such rules as shall be maintained, and which will secure the services of honest and capable officials, and which will also protect them in a degree of independence while in office. Proper rules will protect Congress, as well as the Executive, from much needless precaution, and will prove of great value to the public at large.

I would recommend for your favorable consideration the passage of an act for the admittance of Colorado as a State into the Union. It possesses all the elements of a prosperous State, agricultural and mineral, and, I believe, has a population to justify admission. In that connection, I would also recommend the encouragement of a canal for the purpose of irrigating from the eastern slope of the Rocky mountains to the Missouri river. As a rule I am opposed to the donation of the public lands for internal improvements owned and controlled by private corporations, but in this instance I would make an exception. Between the Missouri river and the mountains there is an area belt of public land from 300 to 500 miles in width, perfectly valueless for the occupation of man, for want of sufficient rain to secure the growth of any products. An irrigating canal would make productive a belt as wide as the supply of water could be made to spread over, across the entire country, and would secure a cordon of settlements connecting the present population of the mountain and mining regions with that of the older States. All the land reclaimed would be clear again. If alternate sections were reclaimed by the Government, I would suggest that the retained sections be thrown open to entry under the Homestead law, and sold to actual settlers at very low prices.

I renew my previous recommendation to Congress for a general amnesty. The number engaged in the late rebellion who are laboring under disadvantages is very small, but enough to keep up a constant irritation. No possible danger can ensue to the Government by restoring them to eligibility to hold office.

I suggest for your consideration the enactment of a law to better secure the civil rights which freedom should secure, but has not effectually secured, to the enfranchised slave.

THE NATION'S FINANCES.

Synopsis of the Report of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The Secretary of the Treasury points out the falling off in the revenues caused by the financial crisis, and bases the estimates of receipts somewhat thereon; shows that the coin receipts are still more than the interest on the public debt and other coin expenditures; recommends economy and reduction in appropriations, and if the effects of the derangement in business should continue and make it necessary to provide additional means, recommends judicious additional taxation rather than to resort to borrowing and increasing the public debt. The operations under the Refunding act for the year ending December 31, 1874, make a saving of $1,000,000 in the annual interest. The entire saving of the annual interest under its operations is $3,000,000. He recommends that action be taken before January next for the payment of the $20,000,000 loans of 1868. The Secretary condemns the practice of paying interest on deposits, as tending to accumulate currency in the large cities, where it is used largely in loans to speculators, whose operations tend directly to increase the annually recurring stringency in the money market and to derange business generally.

The Secretary alludes to the prevailing sentiment that more elasticity should be given to the volume of the currency, and earnestly commends to the wisdom of Congress a careful consideration of the subject, and that in such inquiry the further inflation of irredeemable paper currency should be avoided and a permanent return to the sound basis of specie payments to be kept in view. He regards any large augmentation of legal tender notes in time of peace, as a departure from the declaration of public policy and the pledge of the public faith to the national creditors, made in the act of June 30, 1864, that the amount of such notes should never exceed $400,000,000, as well as from that more solemn pledge contained in the first act of the Forty-first Congress to provide at the earliest period for the redemption of United States notes in coin. He refers to the uncertainty in public opinion as to the right and policy of issuing the $44,000,000 called the reserve, and recommends that the exact status thereof be fixed by Congress. He opposes the issue of any part of the same to inflate the currency, and suggests that it be held for a reserve under restrictions.

He also recommends changes in the law authorizing the national bank notes to be replaced, as there are practical difficulties in carrying out the purpose of Congress under the present law.

A thorough revision of the custom laws is recommended. The tonnage tax should be repealed, and new laws regarding the enrollment and licenses of vessels should be made so far as they affect canal boats and similar craft employed on the internal waters of the States. The reorginization of customs districts on the Atlantic coasts, and various changes in the laws respecting our navigation, are recommended.

The Secretary details what has been done in the matter of the Louisville and Portland Canal, and suggests further legislation.

Steamboat-Inspection.

The report of the Supervising Inspectoor General of the Steamboat-Inspection Service, for the year ending June 30, 1873, contains the following statements:

"The year 1872 proved a disastrous one to life and property on water. One hundred and ninety-two casualties were reported as having occurred to steam vessels, by which 306 lives are known to have been lost, and, as nearly as could be ascertained, resulting in the loss of property to the amount of $4,608,143. Property amounting to $2,023,528, and 198 lives, were lost through casualties by fire alone, showing the urgent necessity of still greater precautions being taken to guard against that destructive element on steam vessels.

"Notwithstanding the steam marine of the country has suffered severely by reason of casualties I am pleased to state that a constant increase in the tonnage thereof has continued. Seventy-two new steamers, with an aggregate tonnage of 11,966, were added to the several inspection districts during the year 1872.

"Among these were the iron steamers of the new American Steamship Line, of Philadelphia. These steamers seem to have given an impetus to commerce which, it is hoped, may result in the establishment of other lines, and in the building of an increased number of steamships in this country which shall traverse the seas under the American flag, and thus aid in the restoration of the prestige of our commerce on the ocean.

"During the year ending June 30, there had been inspected by the various local Boards 3,653 steam vessels of all classes, with an aggregate tonnage of 1,018,484. Certificates or licenses were also issued to 3,447 masters, 1,125 mates, 3,500 pilots, and 6,426 engineers.

"During the calendar year 1872, 3,444 steamers were inspected, with an aggregate tonnage of 1,018,484, and licenses issued to 2,882 masters, 1,037 mates, 3,845 pilots, and 6,266 engineers."

THE NAVY.

Secretary Robeson's Report—The United States Navy Inferior to That of Any Respectable Power—Results of the Polaris Expedition—The Death of Capt. Hall.

The Secretary of the Navy, in his report to the President says there are now in the navy 165 vessels, carrying, exclusive of howitzers, 1,269 guns, a reduction since his last annual report, by sale and otherwise, of thirteen vessels.

A general enumeration of these vessels presents 63 steamers other than iron-clads and tugs, carrying 826 guns; 29 sailing vessels, with 332 guns; 48 iron-clad vessels, with 121 guns; and 25 tugs used for navy-yard and freight purposes. Of this number, there are at present in commission for sea service, distributed on the several foreign stations, and on our own coast 46 vessels, carrying 407 guns. The cruising or active force of the navy, as they may be called, and which is controlled by the appropriations made and the seamen authorized by law, is about the same as last year.

Six of our live-oak cruising ships are now in various stages of forwardness at the several navy yards. These are all of moderate size, and none of them sufficiently advanced to be of present use, but they are adapted to the wants of of our cruising navy, and will, in a few weeks, add materially to its strength and efficiency. The eight sloops of war authorized by the last Congress are all in process of building. The valuable work thus begun should not be discontinued, but the Department should be provided with a moderate amount of funds and authorized to commence each year to build a certain number of tons, to supply regularly the regular yearly expenditure of the naval force, which will of necessity, occur. The work of putting our iron-clad force in efficient condition, referred to in the Secretary's last report, has been proceeded with as fast as the means necessary for the extraordinary work could be spared from the current appropriations for the support of the navy. The wisdom of this action needs no illustration from him at this time. Without it we should have been left not only powerless to assert our own rights, but almost defenceless against arrogance or aggression.

The Secretary says the naval force on the North Atlantic Station was reduced in the spring and summer by ordering north as a necessity some of the vessels which were much in need of repairs, and whose crews needed a change, having been long in the tropics.

The expedition for the survey of the Darien and Inter-Oceanic Canal has completed its duties and submitted its reports.

The Secretary, in speaking of the Polaris, says her cruise has been decidedly the most successful of Arctic expeditions. The geographical knowledge of the Arctic regions has been largely advanced by it. A very particular questioning of every one of the officers and crew of the Polaris, and of the scientific corps, except the three persons yet unexamined, has completely satisfied his associates and himself that Capt. Hall's death occurred from purely natural causes; that his medical treatment was judiciously adapted to his case, and that he was tenderly nursed and cared for to the last.

The evidence has also made it manifest that Capt. Hall was always faithful to the trust reposed in him in assigning him to the command of the expedition; that he was kind, firm, and humane in the exercise of his authority; that he was earnest in his desire and in his attempts to reach a high northern latitude, and if practicable, the Pole itself; and that his untimely death was an irreparable loss to the expedition. It is also apparent that Capt. Buddington, who succeeded to the chief command on the death of Capt. Hall, proved himself to be a good seaman, and that in all dangerous positions in which the Polaris was placed his conduct as the commander was skillful and judicious—the natural result of long experience at sea and in command in northern latitudes.

The Secretary renews the recommendation that the forces in our navy yards be increased and developed so that we may be prepared for all emergencies; that the old navy yard at Philadelphia be abandoned, and new buildings erected at League Island; that the New York yard be preserved in its present site, and that the Pensacola yard be, in a measure, rebuilt.

The Secretary earnestly recommends that ample provisions be made for the support of the Ordnance Bureau, in order that nothing may interfere with the efforts to supply our ships with the most powerful guns.

The estimates for the next fiscal year are $19,252,235, and to this is added the sum of $864,389 for the current repairs of buildings, docks, and incidental expenses in the navy yards, etc. These estimates are less than those of last year by rather more than $2,000,000, but they do not include any extraordinary expenditure for the permanent improvement of the navy, nor amounts necessary for the repairs of our iron-clad fleet, nor for the continued prosecution of some of the great works necessary to a proper condition of our naval establishment.

Since the commencement of the present month events have taken place which make it proper that the navy should be put at once upon a footing for active service. It is by no means the province of this Department, as such, to take part in the conduct or discussion of any diplomatic question, nor should its attitude, at a time when serious international difficulties are possible, be held to indicate anything more than a determination on the part of a military department of the Government to be prepared for action should the necessity for action arise. A respectable force of war vessels and monitors is already on the sea and concentrating at the stations nearest the scene of our possible difficulties. Our whole available iron-clad fleet is on hand, and every wooden war vessel that will float is in active preparation at the various naval stations. These will be ready for sea, fully fitted, as fast as proper crews can be provided for them, and, if the necessity for action should come before the time for it arrives, all there is of the American navy which can be put afloat on the Atlantic Ocean, will be in condition and position to take its proper part.

"Inadequate," says the Secretary, "as this force may be deemed to the responsibilities and pretensions of a Government like ours, and greatly at a disadvantage, as we certainly shall be in respect to the number and character of our vessels in a contest with the fleets of any respectable naval power, I believe that the activity, skill, science, and experience of our navy will be found equal to any difficulty which courage dare to meet or energy will avail to conquer."

The Secretary concludes as follows: "In taking the action above referred to, the Navy Department has already incurred considerable expense, and has been forced to assume responsibilities unusual in times of peace; but, convinced of the wisdom of prompt and decided action, I have not shrunk from those responsibilities, nor hesitated, with the approval of the President, to make warlike preparations in the interests of peace and humanity. I confidently rely for support in this attitude upon the patriotism and good sense of the American people and their representatives, who cannot fail to remember that our naval condition is the result of causes which have been constantly pressed upon their consideration, but which have failed to receive full attention,—doubtless on account of more pressing present requirements and obligations,—and who will clearly realize that duties constantly postponed are certain to be more difficult and much more expensive when performed in haste under the pressure of imperious necessity. The Department has had no necessity to overstep its appropriations, even if it were lawful to do so, but the pressing demands of the present will consume now what was provided for the service of the year in several of the working bureaus. These must be promptly relieved, if their work is to go on. The occasion has already shown, I think, that our navy, as it exists, should at least be put in a condition for active service; and in any event a moderate appropriation for this purpose ought at once to be made, and, if war should by any possibility come, we must be liberally provided to utilize means we have, and to provide others to meet the emergency.

THE CURRENCY.

Abstract of the Report of the Comptroller of the Currency—His Views on Free Banking—Interest on Deposits and Certification of Checks—The Causes of the Financial Panic.

The annual report of the Comptroller of the Currency is a voluminous document, and we have room for only an abstract of the most important portions. He gives the history of the working of the free-banking system in the country previous to the establishment of the national banks, and goes on to say that the amount of national bank currency now authorized to be issued is $354,000,000, and the amount of legal-tender notes $356,000,000, so that the proportion of legal-tender in which national bank notes are now redeemable is nearly identical, though slightly in excess. If the National Banking law was amended so as to require the redemption of national bank notes in legal-tender notes at ½ of 1 per cent. discount, as in the New York State law, instead of at par, as provided by the National Currency act, and the national banks of the whole country would agree to such a provision of the law, the prompt redemption of national bank notes would be insured; but the redemption of this vast amount of circulating notes, if redeemed but once a year, would result in great loss to the people of the United States. A system of redemption of this kind would also at once increase the rate of exchange from the rate of 1-10 of 1 per cent. now existing at most periods of the year between the different cities of the Union, to from ½ cent. to 1 per cent., thus restoring to a considerable degree the condition of exchange at the time of the inauguration of the national banking system, and insuring a loss to the people annually of millions of dollars. Such a system would, however, undoubtedly result in the return of notes of national banks at certain seasons of the year when they are not needed to the vaults of the country banks, to be paid out when the demand for currency increased. Such a system would also give, what is exceedingly desirable at present, elasticity to currency.

In order to insure the prompt redemption of national bank notes the amount issued must be so much increased that the notes will be, say, at ½ of 1 per cent. discount, and this would probably not be accomplished until an addition was made to the present circulation of $100,000,000. The same result would follow from a reduction of the volume of legal tender notes simultaneously with the increase of issues of bank notes; but Congress has so frequently refused to diminish the amount of legal tender notes that the Comptroller is of the opinion that any general system of free banking, accompanied with redemption, must be postponed until the resumption of specie payments. The Comptroller, in order to avoid any misapprehension of his views on this subject, desires to state that he is not an advocate of any permanent system of currency usually known as irredeemable currency. He believes, however, that the people of this country ought not, and will not, submit to the high rates of exchange prevailing previous to the war, and that an amendment to the National Currency act which shall result in restoring the high rates of exchange will also result in the downfall of a system of banking which, it is believed, will yet become the most satisfactory of any system ever established.

During the past year, as far as his observation has extended, national bank notes have been rarely at any perceptible discount for legal tender notes, and during the late panic no distinction was made by the people between legal tender notes of the United States and national bank notes. Both were hoarded alike as the thing most desirable of all others to hold, and it is probable that when specie payment shall be resumed, the faith of the people will be so established in the safety of the currency of the banks that no such general system of redemption will be required as was required of the unsafe currency issued by the different States previous to the war. If the circulation should become redundant, as is sometimes the case with silver coinage, it will only be necessary to present the surplus to the agencies in the city of New York, where more than two-thirds of the circulation is now redeemable, in order to restore the equilibrium, for it is to be hoped that previous to the return to specie payment some system will be adopted which will give abundant elasticity to the currency without incurring the expense and burden of general redemption, and without loss resulting from the high rates of exchange which have always prevailed under such a system.

On the subject of interest on deposits and certification of checks the Comptroller remarks: In my last annual report I referred briefly to the evils resulting from the payment of interest upon deposits, and my predecessors have frequently referred more at length to the same subject. The difficulty has been that the proposed legislation by Congress upon the subject would apply only to national banks. The effect of such legislation would be to bring State banks and savings banks organized by authority of the different States in direct competition with the national banks in securing the accounts of correspondents and dealers. The national banks will be desirous of retaining their business, and the more unscrupulous would not stop to evade the law by offering to make collections throughout the country free of charge; to buy and sell stocks without commission, and rediscount paper at low rates. The proposed action of the Clearing-House in the city of New York, if adopted by the Clearing-Houses of the principal cities of the Union, would do more to prevent the payment of interest on deposits than any Congressional instrument, but the evils resulting from the payment of interest upon deposits are by no means confined to the city banks. It may be safely said that this custom, which prevails in almost every city and village of the Union, has done more than any other to demoralize the business of banking. State banks, private bankers, and associations under the guise of savings banks everywhere offer rates of interest upon deposits, which cannot safely be paid by those engaged in legitimate business. National banks desirous of retaining the business of their dealers also make similar offers, and the result is not only an increase of rates of interest paid by business men, but as a consequence investments in unsecured loans bringing ultimate loss upon the shareholders of the bank and depositors. The kind of legislation needed is that which shall apply to all banks and bankers alike, whether organized under the National Currency act or other laws. A law prohibiting the payment of interest on deposits by national banks will have little effect unless followed by similar legislation under authority of the different States, and there is little hope that such legislation can be obtained.

The National Currency act, which was passed during the war, provided for a tax of one-half of 1 per cent. upon all deposits, and subsequent internal revenue legislation extended this tax to all deposits made with State Banks and individual banks. This was essentially a war tax, and should, in my judgment, be repealed with other similar internal revenue taxation, and I recommend that if legislation is proposed on this subject, the law be so amended as to repeal this tax so far as it applies to demand deposits, and that an increased rate of taxation be imposed uniformly upon all deposits which either directly or indirectly are placed with banks or bankers with the offer or expectation of receiving interest. Such legislation, if rigidly enforced, will have the effect not only to reduce the rate of interest throughout the country, but will at the same time prevent the illegitimate organization of savings banks, the organization of which should be allowed only upon condition that the savings of the people shall be carefully and prudently invested, and the interest arising therefrom, after deducting reasonable expenses, be distributed from time to time to depositors, and no other persons whatsoever.

The act of March 3, 1869, authorizes the appointment of a receiver if any officer, clerk, or agent of any National Bank shall certify any check drawn upon said bank, unless the person or company drawing said check shall have on deposit in said bank at the time said check is certified an amount of money equal to the amount specified in such check. Receivers have been appointed for the National Bank of the Commonwealth, of New York, and the New Orleans Banking Association during the past year for violation of this act, and it is the intention of the Comptroller hereafter to rigidly enforce this act whenever he is satisfied of such violation.

The Comptroller repeats the recommendation in last year's report for the repeal of Sec. 6 of the act of July, 1870, which provided that after the whole $54,000,000 of circulation shall have been distributed, $25,000,000 additional shall be withdrawn from the banking associations organized in the States having an excess and distributed among the States having less than their proportion. Under this section that amount would be withdrawn from New York, Massachusetts, Connecticut, and Rhode Island. The Comptroller also recommends the authorization of $25,000,000 more currency to be distributed among the States which are deficient, namely, those of the South and West. He is of opinion that it would require from three to five years to distribute this additional amount.

The Comptroller says the present financial crisis may in a great degree be attributed to the intimate relations of the banks in the city of New York with the transactions of the Stock Board; more than one-fourth, and in many instances nearly one-third, of the bills receivable of the banks since the late civil war having consisted of demand loans to brokers and members of the Stock Board, which transactions have a tendency to impede and unsettle instead of facilitate the legal business interests of the whole country. Previous to the war the Stock Board is said to have consisted of only 150 members, and its organic principle was strictly a commission business under a stringent and conservative constitution and by-laws. The close of the war found the membership of the Stock Board increased to 1,100, and composed of men from all parts of the country, many of whom had congregated in Wall street, adopting for their rule of business the apt motto of Horace: "Make money—make it honestly if you can—at all events, make money." The law of the State of New York, which had been retained on the statute book since 1813, restricting the operation of the Stock Board, had unfortunately been repealed in 1858, so that its members and manipulators were enabled to increase operations on a gigantic scale. The quotations of this Stock Board are known to be frequently fictions of speculation, and yet these fictions control the business and commerce of a great country, and their influence is not confined to this country, but extends to other countries, and seriously impairs our credit with foreign nations. Railroads and other corporations which we have bolstered up, and which have obtained quotations in London and other markets of the world, have now been reduced to a more proper valuation, or stricken from the list.

Unity of action, it is said, among the leading banks of the great cities will do more to reform abuses than any Congressional enactment; for unless such corporations shall unite and insist upon a legitimate way of conducting business, the laws of Congress in reference to them will be likely soon to become inoperative. The banks are disinclined to unite for such purpose. The legislation required of Congress will be such as will induce associations outside of the city of New York to retain in their vaults such funds as are not needed at the commercial center for the purposes of legitimate trade.

The following statements have been prepared showing the amount of national bank currency, legal-tender notes, and fractional currency issued up to Oct. 13, and Nov. 1, 1873:

National bank currency Oct. 13........	$ 350,079,056
Nov. 1........	350,332,884
Legal-tender notes Oct. 13........	359,566,868
Nov. 1........	360,952,206
Fractional currency Oct. 13........	96,699,191
Nov. 1........	47,876,149
Total Oct. 13........	$ 756,315,135
Total Nov. 1........	759,161,239
Deduct amounts held by the Treasury and by the banks Oct. 13........	$ 116,496,997
Nov. 1........	126,140,727
Which will leave unaccount'd for Oct. 13	$ 639,818,138
Nov. 1........	3,631,020,512

After making due allowance for the currency held by State and saving banks, trust companies, private bankers, these are larger amounts than can be supposed to have been in the pockets of men or the tills of small dealers, but it may be left to the ingenious in such matters to divine what portion thereof was hoarded by the ignorant or covetous.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Annual Report of Supervising Architect Mullet.

Supervising Architect Mullet, in his report, after enumerating the sites purchased for public buildings, recommends an appropriation for the purchase of additional property to enlarge the site occupied by the Custom-House at St. Paul. In reference to the public building at Chicago, Mr. Mullet says: I desire to call the attention of the Department to the importance of erecting the Adams street front, for which no appropriation has yet been made. It is of great importance that this front should be erected simultaneously with the others, and, as the entire building will be required, I would strongly recommend that an appropriation be obtained for the commencement of that wing. Should this be done, a considerable saving in cost as well as time will be made, and the entire building can be placed under roof at an early day. Progress in the public buildings at St. Louis has been very unsatisfactory, but it is trusted that the obstacles in the way of its rapid prosecution will be soon removed.

The Postoffice and Custom-House at Pittsburgh are far too small, and he recommends an appropriation to commence a new building in that city at an early day. He also thinks it desirable that a new building be erected at Toledo, Ohio.

Appropriations for the erection of the proposed new buildings at Nashville; Covington, Ky.; Evansville, Ind.; and Little Rock, Ark., are not sufficient, and it is impossible to comply with the restrictions on their cost except by erecting buildings inadequate in size, and unsuitable for the purposes intended. The architect suggests that, in cases in which it is not considered desirable to appropriate the amount necessary to erect suitable and permanent buildings, it would be more advantageous to defer action, and rent temporary accommodations, until such time as the finances of the Government may warrant the appropriation of the necessary amount.

He renews the recommendations to sell the Marine Hospital property at Pittsburgh, Pa., and also at Detroit, Mich.

He thinks it indispensably necessary that the east front of the Treasury Department be rebuilt, and recommends the erection of a building for the accommodation of the Printing Bureau, and for the records of the Department.

Also, that steps be taken to secure from the city of New York the whole or a portion of the Battery for the erection of a new custom-house, and that a suitable appraisers' store be built in the same locality.

He recommends the extension of the Detroit Custom-House.

In conclusion, Mullet calls attention to the eight-hour law as injurious to the best interests of the Government and to the workmen themselves, and says: If the rule is to be the permanent policy of the Government, and its mechanics and laborers are to be compensated at the rate of 20 per cent. above the highest market rates, I see no reason why officers, clerks, and other employes of the Government should not be paid by the same rate. Under the present system, gentlemen of education who occupy positions of trust and great pecuniary responsibility in the different bureaus actually receive less than mechanics, and are discriminated against in favor of men who, as a rule, exhibit little interest in the performance of their duties, and have no responsibility whatever. It is also a fact that many mechanics receive, under the present system, not only more than their foremen and master mechanics, but more than the Superintendent of work on which they are engaged, the latter classes being allowed no compensation for extra labor performed.

THE ARMY.

Annual Report of the Secretary of War—Expenditures—Recommendations for the Current Year—Strength and Condition of the Regular Army.

The annual report of the Secretary of War shows that the estimates for military purposes for the year ending June 30, 1874, were $33,826,378. The estimates for the same purpose for the year ending June 30, 1875, are $34,410,722, the excess over the current year being $584,244. The appropriation for military purposes for the year ending June 30, 1874, were $34,917,971.

In addition to the usual estimates already made, the following are submitted for such action as Congress may deem proper to take: Armament of forts, $1,449,550; estimates for engineering purposes, $20,459,896.

He recommends that better facilities to obtain field musicians be afforded by the passage of an act authorizing the enlistment of boys not under 12 years of age, with the consent of their parents or guardians.

The Secretary says his orders directing officers, active or retired, to refrain from visiting Washington during sessions of Congress with a view to influence legislation, will be strictly enforced, in so far as he has the power. He also says further legislation is necessary to define the scope of the provisions of the act regulating the pay of officers, commutation, etc. The Secretary recommends that an allowance of ten dollars per month be made to Lieutenants of the line detailed as Acting Assistant Quartermasters.

Of the fifty railroads which purchased material from the Department at the close of the war to the amount of $7,500,000, thirty of them paid in full. The remaining twenty are still indebted about $4,700,000. He recommends the passage of a law which will enable the Department to collect from the Post-office Department the postal earnings of several of the delinquent railroads.

He also recommends an appropriation to continue experiments of the artesian well at Fort D. A. Russell, believing a series of flowing wells to the people of Colorado, Wyoming, Dakota, and Montana, will be of importance in the development of their material resources. He also recommends that an act be passed authorizing the issue of tobacco as part of the rations of enlisted men, and that medical corps be opened to appointment and promotion; that there be an increase of Paymasters from forty-four or fifty-two, and that new appointments and promotions be allowed.

Works on the sea-coast defenses and fortifications have been advanced with rapidity consistent with economy and efficiency, and the works in four of our harbors now contain quite a number of platforms ready for their armament of guns of largest caliber. The harbor defenses in course of construction are recommended to be forced to completion.

The Secretary invites the attention of Congress to the bridging of the navigable waters of the United States, and suggests such general legislation as may be necessary for the preservation of the channels of commerce. He recommends the repeal of the law authorizing the construction of the bridge across the Arkansas river at Little Rock, for the reason that a bridge constructed according to its terms would would materially obstruct navigation.

The survey of the lakes has been continued with success during the season.

The Springfield system of breech-loaders will be henceforth used for muskets and carbines in the army, and an appropriation of $500,000 is asked for to manufacture about 35,000 arms of the accepted pattern for a reserve supply in case of war. It is recommended that the appropriation for arming and equipping the militia be increased in proportion to the increasing population since the passage of the act of 1808.

Cities on the sea-coast, it is stated, are in a very defenseless condition, and the Secretary calls the earnest attention of Congress to the fact, suggesting that $1,500,000, the estimate of the Chief of Ordnance, be appropriated to put them in a state of defense, and says this sum will only provide the defenses with one-sixth of the complement of guns required for the different fortifications.

The purchase of a proving-ground for experiments in heavy guns is advised; also, an appropriation of $75,000 for the manufacture and trial of 12-inch cast-iron rimmed cannon.

A large powder depot, it is recommended, should be established in some region where neither private nor public interests would be endangered, and away from the influence of salt air, and for the purchase of a site and commencement of magazines $100,000 should be appropriated. In the same connection, it is recommended that the smaller arsenals be sold, and a large arsenal be built from the proceeds of these sales.

The Secretary concludes by recommending that legislation should be renewed, giving the Secretary of War authority to appoint a competent person to arrange and prepare for publication official documents relating to the operations of the army during war.

GEN. SHERMAN'S REPORT.

Gen. Sherman, in his report to the Secretary of War, says the number of enlisted men in the army is 495 less than the 30,000 limited by law. In active regiments the number of men sick and on necessary details about posts will fully equal 25 per cent., so that the actual strength for military service does not exceed 19,652 men. In order that the regular army should fulfill its arduous duties on the frontier, as also to form a model on which to shape the volunteer and militia force of the United States, I earnestly recommend that Congress be asked to fix the limit of the enlisted force at such a figure as will give 30,000 for regiments of the line, and to provide specifically for non-combatent detachments, such as Engineer battalion, Ordnance Department, West Point detachment, Signal Department, Ordnance and Commissary Sergeants, in the same manner as has been done for Hospital Stewards.

The artillery regiments of the United States army have an organization different from the infantry, viz.: 12 batteries to a regiment. Of these, only one is equipped and instructed as a battery of artillery, the other eleven companies of each regiment being armed with muskets, and instructed as infantry.

Regimental commissioned officers on duty or belonging to the several departments and divisions number, in the aggregate, 1,532. Present for duty, 1,234. Absent on leave, or detached, 298. The foregoing does not include 31 Second Lieutenants recently appointed from civil life, and under orders to join their regiments.

The military divisions embrace the whole area of the United States, and their reports forwarded to the Secretary of War include the acts of all the regular army. No part of the army, Gen. Sherman says, is under his immediate control, and the existing army regulations devolve on the Secretary of War the actual command of the military peace establishment and all responsibilities thereof, so that he forbears making any further recommendations or report.

The Interior Department.

The Secretary of the Interior in his annual report regards the situation in the Indian service as favorable, and as vindicating the propriety and practicability of the humane policy which was inaugurated at the beginning of President Grant's executive term, and which has governed the Department in the transaction of all business matters pertaining to the conduct of Indian affairs. Satisfactory progress toward the accomplishment of the ends sought to be attained by this policy has already been made, fully justifying the hope that it will eventually achieve the end in view.

The Secretary recommends that the system of cash annuities be abolished, and that payments to Indians be hereafter made in goods and supplies. He suggests that money due the prairie bands of Pottawatomies and Kansas Indians be invested in Government bonds, and placed to the credit of said Indians, respectively, for the purpose of their civilization, to be used by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for that object, both interest and principal to be paid at such times and in such manner as the President of the United States may direct.

The Government should assist the Indians desirous of securing permanent homes, by the donation of stock and farming implements. The first step toward permanent settlement of Indians in fixed homes is establishment and rigid enforcement of regulations to keep them all upon reservations.

The Secretary says that the Sioux Nation is almost completely surrounded by tribes that are really friendly to the Government, and at the same time bitterly hostile to the Sioux. If these friendly tribes could be liberally supplied with improved fire-arms and ammunition, the present supremacy of the Sioux might, in a few years, be destroyed with but little aid from the army.

The Secretary refers to the lawless condition of the Indian Territory, and says if the Ocmulgee Constitution with the proposed amendments is not adopted at the next meeting of the Indian Council, and Congress shall not deem it advisable to erect a territorial government within the Territory, he trusts that necessary legislation may be obtained to at least provide for the organization of a court or courts therein, under the jurisdiction, so far as the appointment of judicial officers is concerned, of the General Government.

The Secretary invites the attention of Congress to a request from the colony of Mennonites, residing in Southern Russia, for a modification of the existing land laws in certain particulars, to enable them to settle upon our public domain in a compact colony. The entire area they will probably require will be about 500,000 acres.

The Secretary notices the business of the Land, Pension, and Education Bureaus; railway and geological surveys; the census, and other subjects coming within the range of his department.

The report of the Secretary of the Interior comprises, besides various other matters, the annual State reports of all railroads in which the Government is interested. The Secretary also refers to the Yellowstone National Park, urging Congress to take early steps to protect this park from the vandalism of visitors, and have its boundaries surveyed and located, as many persons desire to settle upon lands contiguous thereto.

THE PUBLIC LANDS.

Report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

The report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office shows that the number of acres of land surveyed during the year ending June 30, 1873, was 30,488,132. The amount of public land disposed of during the same period was 13,030,606 acres. The number of Surveyors-General has been increased since 1863 from ten to seventeen; the number of land offices from fifty-three to ninety, and the amount of land annually disposed of from 3,000,000 to 13,000,000 acres. In regard to the operations of the Homestead law, the Commissioner reports as follows:

The demand for lands by actual settlers under the Homestead law continues very large. During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1873, 31,246 preliminary entries were made, covering an area of 3,752,347.26 acres. The number of final entries were 9,894, being an increase in final entries of 4,115 over the preceding fiscal year. This law, with some slight amendments, would meet all the requirements and necessities of actual settlers, and I again respectfully renew my recommendation for a complete consolidation of all statutes respecting settlement rights into a general Homestead law. A bill for that purpose met with favorable action from both houses of the last Congress, but owing to a slight amendment as to the time when it should take effect, by the House, on the last day of the session, in which the Senate had not time to concur, it failed to become a law. The selections certified for common schools during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1873, amounted to 76,909.17 acres, and for seminaries, 320 acres. The selections certified for agricultural colleges amounted to 16,976.21. The locations of agricultural college scrip by assignees of the States to which the same was issued reported during the year cover an area of 653,446.41. Since my last annual report, agricultural college scrip representing 240,000 acres has been issued to the States of Arkansas and Florida. This exhausts the amount which Congress authorized.

The records of the office show an aggregate construction of 2,278 miles of road, distributed as follows: In Michigan, 186 miles; Wisconsin, 89 miles; Iowa, 50 miles; Minnesota, 712 miles; Missouri, 97 miles; Kansas, 464 miles; Arkansas, 240 miles; California, 40 miles; Colorado, 245 miles; Indian Territory, 155 miles. Total, as above, 2,278 miles. Portions of the roads included in the foregoing report of construction were actually completed prior to the commencement of the last fiscal year. This report will be understood as referring more particularly to the official record of construction, and to the acceptance by the proper authorities, the evidence of which has been received at this office since my last annual report, and consequently was not included therein. During the previous year the reports show a constructed length of 1,743 miles of road, a difference in favor of the latter year of 535 miles. The policy of extending aid to railroad enterprise by national legislation having been restricted by the caution of Congress during the last few years, the aggregate of definite location of new roads is not as great as in former years. The reports show the definite location of 323 miles during the fiscal year, of which 200 miles are of the Northern Pacific railroad, in the Territory of Dakota.

The following act of Congress was approved Feb. 18, 1873 (17 Stat., 465):

An Act in relation to mineral lands.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress assembled, That within the States hereinafter named deposits or mines of iron or coal be, and they are hereby, excluded from the operations of an act entitled "An act to promote the development of the mining resources of the United States," approved May 10, 1872, and said act shall not apply to the mineral lands situate and being within the States of Michigan, Wisconsin and Minnesota, and that said lands are hereby declared free and open to exploration and purchase according to the legal subdivisions thereof, as before the passage of said act; and that any bona fide entries of such lands within said States, since the passage thereof, may be patented without reference to the provisions of said act.

Previous to the date of said Mining act of 1872, lands containing deposits of iron ore were disposed of for cash at private entry, the same as agricultural lands. The language of the Mining act, however, is so comprehensive as to justify the belief that it was the intention of Congress to include iron ore among the mineral deposits to be disposed of under its provisions. Congress, by subsequent legislation, appears to have placed this construction upon the act.

Don't Wet Your Coal.

People who prefer wetting the winter's store of coal to lay the dust on putting it into their cellars, do not generally know that they are laying up for themselves a store of sore throats and other evils consequent upon the practice. Even the fire-damp, says an exchange, which escapes from the coal mines, arises from the slow decomposition of coal at temperatures of but little above that of the atmosphere, but under augmented pressure. By wetting a mass of freshly broken coal and getting it into a cellar, the mass is heated to such a degree that carburetted and sulphuretted hydrogen are given off for long periods of time and pervade the whole house. The liability of wet coal to mischievous results under such circumstances may be appreciated from the fact that there are several instances on record of spontaneous combustion of coal when stowed into the bunkers or holds of vessels. And from this cause, doubtless, many missing coal vessels have perished.

Burglar-Proof Screw.—A screw, adapted to fastening locks, has been invented. It has a right-hand wooden thread at the head-end, and smaller left-hand iron thread on the other end, or vice versa—the latter being supplied with a nut. An effort to remove it from one side by unscrewing at the head only tightens the nut, while an attempt to drive out the screw on the other side, after taking off the nut, is resisted by the wooden thread.

Baltimore & Ohio Railway.

FORT WAYNE, IND., Nov. 20.—The Baltimore and Ohio Railway Company have been forced to suspend the work of building, on account of an inability to obtain currency for their European exchanges, of which they have plenty, and also on account of the severe stormy and cold weather which has prevailed for the last few weeks. The company will commence work in the spring and push through to Chicago as fast as men and money can do it. Citizens along the line have hindered the work greatly by throwing every obstacle they could in the way. It is rumored that a movement is on the tapis for consolidating with the Canada Southern from Defiance to Chicago, thus making a much shorter route to Chicago from Toledo and other lake ports than by the Air Line or Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Railway.

There several errors and misrepresentations in the above, which ought not to go without correction. The general and unqualified statement that the company "have been forced to suspend the work of building" is untrue. The work is now being prosecuted, along here, and at other places, and will be kept up all winter, except when the weather for a few days at a time, which may be expected, renders it impossible. The most flagrant untruth in the dispatch, however, is the statement that "citizens along the line have hindered the work greatly by throwing every obstacle they could in the way." Now, it is well known to all who have any adequate knowledge of the facts, that "citizens along the line" have encouraged and aided, and extended facilities to the prosecution of this great work with unstinted generosity and public spirit. There may be a few instances of property-owners along the line who have felt that the summary occupation of their farms, and destruction of growing crops, without immediate compensation was hard to bear, and have so expressed themselves. This is not "throwing obstacles in the way," it is simply insisting on rights. There may have been a few instances along a line of over 300 miles, of people being a little unreasonable; but we venture the assertion that for every such instance there have been a hundred in which the road agents, contractors and sub-contractors have been oppressive, unreasonable and regardless of the people's views of right. For this, of course, we believe the company are not to be blamed. We believe it is an honorable company and desirous of making the construction of its road as little inconvenient to the people as possible; and we are satisfied—nay, we know—from statements of high officials of the company that they regard the mass of citizens along this line as the most friendly and magnanimous with whom they or any other company ever came in contact in the business of constructing a railway.—New Era.

PANIC TALK.—A scrap of conversation in this wise was overheard in a New York office a few days ago:—

"How's business?"

"Dull! Awfully dull!"

"Doing any advertising?"

"No; took 'em all out a month ago."

"How long since business got dull?"

"O, three or four weeks ago."

"That is—about the time you stopped advertising."

(Merchant ruminates and canvasser looks innocent.)

It is a pity that William M. Tweed could not have been transferred to Blackwell's Island on Monday, Dec. 1, instead of Saturday, Nov. 29. On the former date the Credit Mobilier gentlemen and the back salary winners assembled at Washington. The transfer of Tweed on Monday would have furnished a moral that is now lost to the youth of this great country. Raise vouchers, and you shall go to prison; but raise salaries, especially by ex post facto legislation, and you shall go to Congress.

* * *

Private advices are that young Walworth, sentenced to imprisonment for life for the killing of a father who was such only in the sense that the Church had sanctified a mere animal passion, will not live to surve out his term. As this may sound like a Hibernibism, it is proper to explain that, like his uncle the reverend clergyman, the prisoner's life is slowly ebbing away under the weight of degradation imposed by a crime that it would be well for the honor of a grand old family if it had been perpetrated at a much earlier period, and by a friend, instead of a member, of that household.

A Forty Thousand Dollar Cow.

We doubt if more extravagant sums have ever been paid for fancy cattle than those lavished during a recent sale of the herd of the Hon. Samuel Campbell, at New York Mills, near Utica, N. Y. Representatives of the most prominent short horn breeders in the world were present, including a large delegation of English cattle stock buyers, consisting of lords and other titled persons.

The breeds which brought the largest sums were Duchesses and Oxfords; and the first animal sold, known as the 2nd Duke of Oneida, a three year old bull, brought $12,000 The cow known as 1st Duchess of Oneida was next offered, and after an extraordinarily exciting contest, was knocked down to Lord Skelmersdale, of England, for $30,600. Subsequently other cattle of the same strain followed at $19,000 and $35,000, and the interest culminated with the sale of the 8th Duchess of Geneva, which was bought by Mr. R. Pavin Davis, of Gloucestershire, England, for the unprecedented sum of $40,600.

A Dignified Man and a Postoffice Clerk.

The human heart, in all its expansive, limitless capacity for enjoyment, takes greater pleasure in nothing more than witnessing a portly, solemn-visaged man, the embodiment of natural dignity, importance in clothes, administer a scathing rebuke to some "smart" petty official. This morning just such a personification of innate dignity loomed up at the stamp window of the Postoffice, and glared in gloomy and majestic displeasure at the busy clerk registering a letter, before he sprang to the window and asked the stately customer what he wished. The great man did not answer for severel moments. He gazed steadily and impressively over the clerk's head, and then asked in ponderous tones:

"Is there any one here who attends to busines?"

The embarrassed clerk blushed, faltered for a moment, then recovering himself, said with characteristic and national cheerfulness, becoming an official of the Republic:

"I will see, sir."

And he disappeared. He went into the other department, tortured a carrier with an original conundrum and heard a good story in the mailing room, and came back.

"Yes, sir," he said to the great one, "there are, in addition to myself, three clerks in the letter department, one in the mailing room, four carriers, three route agents, the mail driver, and a janitor."

"Ah? I am glad there are so many. I may, in all that number, find one who is at his post."

And then he looked as impressive as a special agent, and was silent for three minutes, while the impassive clerk awaited his orders, and impatient men behind him fidgited and grumbled. Finally the great man said, with deep solemnity:

"I wish one three-cent stamp."

The clerk tore off the stamp and held it, waiting for the consideration. The great man made a somewhat longer pause than usual; he felt in his various vest pockets, he graduelly lost his look of impressive rebuke, his chest caved in, and he assumed the aspect of an ordinary frail mortal, and he said:

"Ah—the fact is—I'm sure—ah—in short, I find that I have carelessly left my purse at home Can you kindly—

The impassive clerk, with the faintest suggestion of triumph in his eye, waved the great man aside with:

"Sorry for you, sir, but the clerk who sells on credit is not in. What does the next man want?"

And we felt so good to see how that clerk was taken down by the dignified man that we went away and laughed for a week.

"How old is your mamma?" asked a love-smitten old bachelor of the daughter of the widow who had enchanted him. "I don't know, sir; ma's age varies from about forty-three to twenty-five," was the artless reply, and the bachelor was disenchanted.

Jack, who is at boarding school in the country, writes home: "Please send me a good trap to catch a woodchuck, and a piece of carpet for me to say my prayers on."

A Pennsylvania paper has a story of a lady who softened the shell of an egg in vinegar, inserted the egg in a five gallon demijohn, placed it in a hatching oven, and lo! she possesses now a half grown chicken in this curious coop. The destination of the the present wonder is the zoological garden of Philadelphia, but she promises to raise an American eagle in a similar manner for the Centennial Exposition.

WORK.

When God said unto Adam, "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread," he blessed all mankind by the command, save, perhaps, Adam himself. There is nothing so necessary to man's happiness in this world as work. An idle man is a poor miserable devil at best, despised by his fellow man and loathed by his Creator. A man may be cursed by glaring faults, by overpowering vices which a life-long struggle may fail to remedy, but idleness is not one of them. The remedy for idleness is simple, and any fool may apply it. Work is the great panacea for the ills which flesh is heir to. The dyspeptic may thank his stars for the blessed privilege, while the mourner finds in it relief from the crushing weight of his great sorrow. Even wearisome toil is better than cankering idleness. Work lightens grief, and makes utter despair impossible. The man who, at middle age, looks back upon a misspent life and grieves o "what might have been;" who goes out into the bright sunlight with bowed head and faltering footsteps, dreads the half-wished-for hour of death, a find sweet peace in work. The sorrowing mother who has laid her darling in the cold grave—that gloomy prison house of all our hopes—finds relief in work. The father whose life is imbittered by the follies and vices of an ungrateful son, finds immunity from hopeless insanity in work. "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread" is a blessing instead of a curse, and the man or woman who fails to enjoy the rich fruits of honest toil is a fit subject for both pity and contempt.

Men talk flippantly of the consolations of the Christian religion, but a well informed, earnest Christian will freely admit that there is no rest, no peace, no soothing, no balm, no consolation outside of work There never was, there never will be a lazy Christian God will have no drones in his vineyard, for He has taught us that work is the foundation of the Christian religion. The highest Christian motto is, "Do your life work well."

Steps are being taken in all of this principal cities of the country, and in many of the country towns, to devise measures for the relief of the indigent, and many who must inevitably become so from the stringency of the finances and the scarcity of labor during the winter before us. At a season of the year when the most improvident even reflect upon their sloth and wastefulness, and are moved to apply their earnings to the supply of their prospective necessities, such as fuel clothing and food, they are unfortunately out of employment, and what is still worse, unable to obtain any. It is useless to sermonize on their thriftlessness—on their indifference in providing for a rainy day. The fact that they are destitute and helpless, and that to prevent vice, pauperism and crime they must have the aid of those who are in a situation to assist them, should be the subject of consideration beyond all others. The suffering among the poor, during the hard winter staring us in the face, will not be confined to the manufaaturing centres, but we fear it will have a universal range. If the financial disturbances continue, such a condition of affairs may be anticipated. A suspension of manufactories, of large and small industries, scattered here and there throughout the country, and furnishing employment to innumerable men, women and children, must follow. It is said that there are in the cities of New York and Philadelphia at least ninety thousand people who are willing to work, and who must have employment or become public charges either as paupers or as criminals. If the stagnation of the industries works a like proportion of hardship in the other cities of the country the want and misery that will fall to the lot of the laboring classes will be distressing and frightful. So far, the financial irregularity has chiefly affected the merchants and farmers of this region, but it will undoubtedly take a wider scope before long, unless some measure of relief can be devised and carried into practice. In view of the gloomy prospect and the probability of the wealthier of our citizens being called upon for charities to ameliorate the condition of the poor and needy, the earliest attention and the most practical counsel is demanded.

"How did you manage to win her affections so quickly, Dan? The receipt's worth knowing."

"Oh that was simple enough!" replied he. "The first night I arrived at the lodging house in Auckland, I found myself sitting next the young woman at supper, who I soon found was one of the newly arrived emigrants. I looked her over, and saw she was a round, cherry looking lass, with a sweet laughing face, and thought she'd do. I didn't know how to go foolin' raound her—as I am certain you would have done, sir, no offense—but just spoke a word or two with her, and when we came out into the passage gave her a squeeze and a kiss.' Says she, 'How dare you?' Says I, 'I want to marry you, my dear.' 'Marry me,' cried she laughing, 'why, I don't know you.' 'No more do I know you, my dear; so that makes it all fair and equal.' She didn't know how to put a clapper on that, so she only laughed, and said she could not think of it. 'Not think of it,' said I, artful like; 'not when pou have come all these thousands of miles for that purpose? 'What do you mean? says she staring. 'Come now' says I' don't tell me. I know's what's what. When a man emigrationzes, its to get work; when a woman emigrationizes, its to get married. You may as well do it at once.' Well, she giggled a bit and we were spliced two days afterward.

A Forty Thousand Dollar Cow.

We doubt if more extravagant sums have ever been paid for fancy cattle than those lavished during a recent sale of the herd of the Hon. Samuel Campbell, at New York Mills, near Utica, N. Y. Representatives of the most prominent short horn breeders in the world were present, including a large delegation of English cattle stock buyers, consisting of lords and other titled persons.

The breeds which brought the largest sums were Duchesses and Oxfords; and the first animal sold, known as the 2nd Duke of Oneida, a three year old bull, brought $12,000 The cow known as 1st Duchess of Oneida was next offered, and after an extraordinarily exciting contest, was knocked down to Lord Skelmersdale, of England, for $30,600. Subsequently other cattle of the same strain followed at $19,000 and $35,000, and the interest culminated with the sale of the 8th Duchess of Geneva, which was bought by Mr. R. Pavin Davis, of Gloucestershire, England, for the unprecedented sum of $40,600.

A Dignified Man and a Postoffice Clerk.

The human heart, in all its expansive, limitless capacity for enjoyment, takes greater pleasure in nothing more than witnessing a portly, solemn-visaged man, the embodiment of natural dignity, importance in clothes, administer a scathing rebuke to some "smart" petty official. This morning just such a personification of innate dignity loomed up at the stamp window of the Postoffice, and glared in gloomy and majestic displeasure at the busy clerk registering a letter, before he sprang to the window and asked the stately customer what he wished. The great man did not answer for severel moments. He gazed steadily and impressively over the clerk's head, and then asked in ponderous tones:

"Is there any one here who attends to busines?"

The embarrassed clerk blushed, faltered for a moment, then recovering himself, said with characteristic and national cheerfulness, becoming an official of the Republic:

"I will see, sir."

And he disappeared. He went into the other department, tortured a carrier with an original conundrum and heard a good story in the mailing room, and came back.

"Yes, sir," he said to the great one, "there are, in addition to myself, three slerks in the letter department, one in the mailing room, four carriers, three route agents, the mail driver, and a janitor."

"Ah? I am glad there are so many. I may, in all that number, find one who is at his post."

And then he looked as impressive as a special agent, and was silent for three minutes, while the impassive clerk awaited his orders, and impatient men behind him fidgited and grumbled. Finally the great man said, with deep solemnity:

"I wish one three-cent stamp."

The clerk tore off the stamp and held it, waiting for the consideration. The great man made a somewhat longer pause than usual; he felt in his various vest pockets, he graduelly lost his look of impressive rebuke, his chest caved in, and he assumed the aspect of an ordinary frail mortal, and he said:

"Ah—the fact is—I'm sure—ah—in short, I find that I have carelessly left my purse at home Can you kindly—

The impassive clerk, with the faintest suggestion of triumph in his eye, waved the great man aside with:

"Sorry for you, sir, but the clerk who sells on credit is not in. What does the next man want?"

And we felt so good to see how that clerk was taken down by the dignified man that we went away and laughed for a week.

"How old is your mamma?" asked a love-smitten old bachelor of the daughter of the widow who had enchanted him. "I don't know, sir; ma's age varies from about forty-three to twenty-five," was the artless reply, and the bachelor was disenchanted.

A Pennsylvania paper has a story of a lady who softened the shell of an egg in vinegar, inserted the egg in a five gallon demijohn, placed it in a hatching oven, and lo! she possesses now a half grown chicken in this curious coop. The destination of the the present wonder is the zoological garden of Philadelphia, but she promises to raise an American eagle in a similar manner for the Centennial Exposition.

WORK.

When God said unto Adam, "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread," he blessed all mankind by the command, save, perhaps, Adam himself. There is nothing so necessary to man's happiness in this world as work. An idle man is a poor miserable devil at best, despised by his fellow man and loathed by his Creator. A man may be cursed by glaring faults, by overpowering vices which a life-long struggle may fail to remedy, but idleness is not one of them. The remedy for idleness is simple, and any fool may apply it. Work is the great panacea for the ills which flesh is heir to. The dyspeptic may thank his stars for the blessed privilege, while the mourner finds in it relief from the crushing weight of his great sorrow. Even wearisome toil is better than cankering idleness. Work lightens grief, and makes utter despair impossible. The man who, at middle age, looks back upon a misspent life and grieves over "what might have been;" who goes out into the bright sunlight with bowed head and faltering footsteps, dreading the half-wished-for hour of death, will find sweet peace in work. The sorrowing mother who has laid her darling in the cold grave—that gloomy prison house of all our hopes—finds relief in work. The father whose life is imbittered by the follies and vices of an ungrateful son, finds immunity from hopeless insanity in work. "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread" is a blessing instead of a curse, and the man or woman who fails to enjoy the rich fruits of honest toil is a fit subject for both pity and contempt.

Men talk flippantly of the consolations of the Christian religion, but a well informed, earnest Christian will freely admit that there is no rest, no peace, no soothing, no balm, no consolation outside of work There never was, there never will be a lazy Christian God will have no drones in his vineyard, for He has taught us that work is the foundation of the Christian religion. The highest Christian motto is, "Do your life work well."

Steps are being taken in all of this principal cities of the country, and in many of the country towns, to devise measures for the relief of the indigent, and many who must inevitably become so from the stringency of the finances and the scarcity of labor during the winter before us. At a season of the year when the most improvident even reflect upon their sloth and wastefulness, and are moved to apply their earnings to the supply of their prospective necessities, such as fuel clothing and food, they are unfortunately out of employment, and what is still worse, unable to obtain any. It is useless to sermonize on their thriftlessness—on their indifference in providing for a rainy day. The fact that they are destitute and helpless, and that to prevent vice, pauperism and crime they must have the aid of these who are in a situation to assist them, should be the subject of consideration beyond all others. The suffering among the poor, during the hard winter staring us in the face, will not be confined to the manufaaturing centres; but we fear it will have a universal range. If the financial disturbances continue, such a condition of affairs may be anticipated. A suspension of manufactories, of large and small industries, scattered here and there throughout the country, and furnishing employment to innumerable men, women and children, must follow. It is said that there are in the cities of New York and Philadelphia at least ninety thousand people who are willing to work, and who must have employment or become public charges either as paupers or as criminals. If the stagnation of the industries works a like proportion of hardship in the other cities of the country the want and misery that will fall to the lot of the laboring classes will be distressing and frightful. So far, the financial irregularity has chiefly affected the merchants and farmers of this region, but it will undoubtedly take a wider scope before long, unless some measure of relief can be devised and carried into practice. In view of the gloomy prospect and the probability of the wealthier of our citizens being called upon for charities to ameliorate the condition of the poor and needy, the earliest attention and the most practical counsel is demanded.

The Death of Charles D. Bond.

We are again called upon to record the death of one of Fort Wayne's most prominent and honorable citizens. The business people of the city knew of the sickness which confined Mr. Bond to his residence for the past ten days, but few were prepared to learn this morning that it had terminated, and that one in whom all had an interest had been removed from the duties and cares with which this life is fraught. Mr. Bond was forty-two years of age, and had been, from early boyhood, identified with the commercial interests of Fort Wayne, in such a manner, as to be regarded as a leader in financial circles. But not only in the domane of finance, was Mr. Bond held in high esteem. In the social circle his presence was ever a welcome one, and in the church his exemplary conduct, his liberality in everything which tended to its advancement, and his profound belief in its efficacy, made him an invaluable member and an acknowledged leader. The father of Mr. Bond brought his family here at an early day from Lockport, New York, and as his means were quite limited, his sons were obliged to carve their own way. Developing, at an early age, a spirit of independence, frugality and energy, responsible and lucrative positions opened themselves, and for some time prior to the war, Mr. Bond fulfilled the duties of cashier of the Fort Wayne branch of the old State Bank As soon as circumstances made a necessity for establishing National Banks, Mr. Bond, with others, organized the "Fort Wayne National Bank," and was elected its first President, which office he filled until his death, being all the while its chief executive officer. Careful in all his business transactions, and yet performing the duties incumbent upon him in spirit of fairness and liberality, he gained for himself and his bank a reputation for honorable dealing and stability, that extended all over the country. Mr. Bond was married about twenty years ago to the daughter of Charles Ewing, Esq., who with six children survives him. Mr. Bond died in the communion of the Episcopal Church, of which he had been for many years an active and zealous member. In his death, our community has sustained a loss which is confined to no church or party, a loss which time cannot repair; but he has left behind an example, which, well studied and followed, would prove a legacy indeed—richer far than could be counted in gold and silver—an example of industry, charity, integrity, hopefulness and patient devotion to good works. The merchant and mechanic, the clergyman and the layman, all who knew Charles D. Bond will unite in sympathy for the bereaved family and friends, and say "a good man has gone from among us."—Sentinel of Dec. 9.

LUKE.

(In the Colorado Park, 1873.)

BY BRET HARTE.

Wot's that you're readin'?—a novel? A novel—well, darn my skin!
You, a man grown and bearded, and histin' such stuff as that in—
Stuff about gals and their sweethearts! No wonder you're thin ez a knife!
Look at me!—clar two hundred—and never read one in my life!

That's my opinion o' novels. And, ez to their lyin' round here,
They belonged to the Jedge's daughter—the Jedge who came up last year
On account of his lungs, and the mountains, and the balsam o' pine and fir;
And his daughter—well, she read novels, and that's what's the matter with her.

Yet she was sweet on the Jedge, and stuck by him day and night,
Alone in the cabin up yer—till she grew like a ghost, all white.
She was only a slip of a thing, ez light and ez up and away
Ez rifle-smoke blown through the woods, but she wasn't my kind—no way!

Speakin' o' gals, d'ye mind that house ez you rise the hill,
A mile and a half from White's, and jist above Mattingly's mill?
You do? Well, now, thar's a gal? What, you saw her? O, come now, thar, quit!
She was only bedevilin' you, boys, for to me she don't cotton one bit.

Now, she's what I call a gal—ez pretty and plump ez a quail;
Teeth ez white ez a hound's, and they'd go through a tenpenny-nail;
Eyes that can snap like a cap. So she asked to know "Whar I was hid."
She did! Oh, it's jist like her sass, for she's pert as a Katydid.

But what was I talking of?—Oh! the Jedge and his daughter—she read
Novels the whole day long, and I reckon she read them abed,
And sometimes she read them out loud to the Jedge on the porch where he sat,
And 'twas how "Lord Augustus" said this, and how "Lady Blanche" she said that.

But the sickest of all that I heerd was a yarn thet they read 'bout a chap,
"Leather-stocking" by name, and a hunter chock full o' the greenest o' sap;
And they asked me to hear, but I says, "Miss Mabel, not any for me;
When I likes I can sling my own lies, and thet chap and I shouldn't agree."

Yet somehow-or-other she was always sayin' I brought her to mind
Of folks about whom she had read, or suthin belike of thet kind;
And thar warn't no end o' the names that she gave me thet summer up here—
"Robin Hood," "Leather-Stocking," "Rob Roy"—O, I tell you, the critter was queer.

And yet, ef she hadn't been spiled, she was harmless enough in her way,
She could jabber in French to her dad, and they say that she knew how to play,
And she worked me that shot-pouch up thar—which the man doesn't live ez kin use,
And slippers—you see 'em down yer—ez would cradle an Injun's pappoose.

Yet along o' them novels, you see, she was wastin' and mopin' away,
And then she got shy with her tongue, and at last had nothin' to say;
And whenever I happened around, her face it was hid by a book,
And it warn't until she left that she gave me ez much ez a look.

And this was the way it was: It was night when I kem up here
To say to 'em all "Good-by," for I reckened to go for deer
At "sun-up" the day they left. So I shook 'em all round by the hand,
'Cept Mabel, and she was sick, ez they gave me to understand.

But, jist as I passed the house one morning, at dawn, some one,
Like a little waver o' mist, got up on the hill with the sun;
Miss Mabel it was, alone—all wrapped in a mantle o' lace—
And she stood there straight in the road, with a touch o' the sun in her face.

And she looked me right in the eye—I'd seen suthin like it before
When I hunted a wounded doe to the edge of the Clear Lake shore,
And I had my knee on its neck, and jist was raisin' my knife,
When it gave me a look like that, and—well, it got off with its life.

"We are going to-day," she said, "and I thought I would say good-by
To you in your own house, Luke—these woods, and the bright blue sky!
You've always been kind to us, Luke, and papa has found you still
As good as the air he breathes, and wholesome as Laurel Tree Hill.

"And we'll always think of you, Luke, as the thing we could not take away;
The Balsam that dwells in the woods, the rainbow that lives in the spray,
And you'll sometimes think of me, Luke, as you know you once used to say,
A rifle-smoke blown through the woods, a moment, but never to stay."

And then we shook hands. She turned, but a-suddent she tottered and fell,
And I caught her sharp by the waist, and held her a minit—well,
It was only a minit, you know, that ez cold and ez white she lay
Ez a snow-flake here on my breast, and then—well, she melted away—

And was gone. * * * And thar are her books, but I say not any for me,
Good enough, maybe, for some, but them and I mightn't agree.
They spiled a decent gal ez might hev made some chap a wife,
And look at me!—clar two hundred—and never read one in my life!

THE DOCTOR'S LAST SHOT.

Mrs. Smith and Mrs. Brown were having a very comfortable afternoon together. Mrs. Smith, who was an invalid, or thought herself one, which is just as bad, was reclining in an easy-chair, and Mrs. Brown, who had run in with her knitting work just to see how she was, had been persuaded to spend the rest of the day with her friend.

"Yes, Mrs. Brown, I consider it very provideutial. That poor, poor niece of mine was left an orphan on the cold charity of the world, and as I was the only friend she had, she came right here, of course. Well, here I am in such delicate health, needing constant attention, and I couldn't expect my own girls, poor dears, to be fussing around their sick mother all the time. I want them to enjoy themselves while they can. This poor thing needed a home, and I gave it to her at once. I said, 'Of course, child, come right here and live with us. You can make yourself useful, no doubt, and it'll all be right.' She's been here six months now, and has been a wonderful help to me. I keep her busy from daylight until dark to keep her mind off her troubles, you know, and nights when I can't sleep it's dreadful handy to have her where she can rub my back, soak my feet, bathe my head, and read me to sleep."

"Do you pay her wages?"

"Bless me, no! She said something about it one day as if she expected to be paid for her work, but I told her we couldn't think of hiring our own blood relations to work for us. I told her to just be easy about that, whenever she needed anything we'd see about it. She gave me a kind of a queer smile that I didn't quite understand or like; but on the whole, she is wonderfully quiet and gentle like, and I consider it a real providence."

"Where is she now?"

"I sent her down to the back pasture to get some blackberries for my tea. I thought may be I'd relish them if they were fresh."

Down in the back pasture she was, the poor niece, Meta Langdon, but not picking blackberries. She was sitting on a mossy log among the bushes, crying as if her heart would break. It did her good; it cooled the fierce fever in her heart, and she finally grew quiet and slipped softly down upon her knees and prayed long and earnestly for patience and wisdom and help from her heavenly Father. Then she caught up her pail and rose to commence her task. But it so happened that Dr. Chester, who was spending a few weeks in that delightful country place, was out hunting that day. A fine, plump partridge flew up from the bushes just at that moment, and the doctor fired. To his astonishment the bird escaped, but a shrill scream and heavy fall beyond the bushes made him throw down his gun and bag and rush furiously through the sharp briers, never heeding the rents they made in his fine hunting suit or the cruel scratches upon his face and hands.

There lay the game he had brought down, in the shape of a young girl who was in a dead faint or killed for aught he knew. He quickly loosened her dress and dashed water in her face from the full canteen which he happened to to have, and finally forced a few drops of brandy between her lips. At length she opened her eyes, to his great relief, and tried to rise, but a sharp cry of pain showed there was something more serious than a mere fright.

"What is it—where are you hurt?"

"My arm," she exclaimed.

He tore the faded calico sleeve open to the shoulder, and, sure enough, the soft, white arm was covered with blood and seemed to be riddled with shot.

"Dear, dear, what have I done!" he exclaimed, hastily tying his own and her handkerchief tightly around it. "There's no time for apologies or explanations. I thought I was shooting a partridge, and in some unaccountable way I have shot you. Now tell me where you live so I can get you home as soon as possible. I am a physician, and we'll soon have the poor arm all right again."

"My home is just over the hill; I can walk if you will help me a little." With a set, resolute face, and lips tightly closed to keep back the moans of pain, Meta walked hastily toward home, leaning upon his arm. But just as they reached the gate she fainted again, and taking her in his arms he bore her rapidly to the house, and without any ceremony pushed open the parlor door and laid her upon a sofa.

Mrs. Smith screamed murder at the top of her voice, and went into violent hysterics. The doctor frowned scornfully at her, and said to Mrs. Brown: "There's no time for nonsence; bring me some cold water and bandages at once, and send somebody to the hotel for Dr. Chester's small case of surgical instruments."

Mrs. Smith, left to herself, soon recovered, and insisted upon an explanation of the affair.

"It's nothing serious, I hope, I have accidently sent a charge of shot into this young lady's arm. Are you her mother?"

"No, indeed, she is a poor dependent creature that we've taken in for charity's sake; a niece of mine, and what I'm to do with her now I can't see. I can't take care of her, and indeed, sir, it's mighty inconvenient to have her laid up just at this time. She is very necessary to my comfort. I need a sight of care and waitin' on, night and day."

"Well, madam, she'll 'need a sight of care and waitin' on' herself now for a while, and must have it."

By this time the young girl revived again under the vigorous treatment she received, and the instruments were brought to him.

"Now, madam, will you tell where to take this young lady, for she must be put to bed at once."

"Well, she sleeps in a little closet off my room—"

"That will never do. Show me the largest, best room you have in the house." Taking Meta gently in his arms, the doctor followed Mrs. Smith up stairs to a large, pleasant chamber. She groaned in spirit as she turned down the white counterpane, and assisted the doctor in getting Meta undressed and to bed; but he was not to trifled with at such a time. "Now, madam, I will excuse you, but let Mrs. Smith bring me plenty of warm water, and soft, old linen, and remain to assist me. And I want a servant close at hand to get whatever else I may require while dressing the arm."

It was a terrible hour to Meta while he probed each wound and removed the shot that were deeply imbedded in the tender flesh. Fortunately no bone was broden, and at last it was neatly bandaged with soft linen and wet with a healing lotion, and she fell asleep. Mrs. Brown proved an efficient helper; and as they passed quietly out of the room the doctor said:

"My patient must have the best of care and attention. Could you stay and nurse her for awhile?"

"Yes, I might."

"Very well; I will pay you well if you will do it, for everything will depend upon keeping her quiet now."

He met Mrs. Smith in the hall.

"Madam, this woman has consented to stay and take care of your niece, and I will see that she is well paid for it. But mind what I say: you must not see her, nor must any one else see her but Mrs. Brown and myself for a week at least, for she will have a serious time of it at the best. I regret it exceedingly, more than I can tell you, that I have been the cause of all this suffering, and I will do my best to have her about again as soon as possible." So saying, the doctor wished them good-day, and soon disappeared from their view.

"Well, now, if that is'nt cool! And what am I to do all this time?" groaned Mrs. Smith, rocking herself vigorously in her great arm-chair. "And my best spare room, too! Say, did he muss everything up dressing that arm?"

"O no! he was very careful about that."

"Well, that's a comfort any way. To think I should have such trouble with that girl just when I needed her most! I think it is a very mysterious dispensation of Providence."

The next morning the doctor found Meta in a high fever, moaning with pain and delirious. The arm was badly swollen and inflamed, and altogether her case had assumed a very alarming aspect. He did not go hunting or fishing that day, but stayed by her bedside administering medicine with his own hand, and doing everything in his power for her relief. He was greatly distressed over the accident, and inwardly vowed he would never fire off another gun as long as he lived.

But what a revelation of toil, hardship, and cruel wrong the unconscious Meta made in her delirium! She fancied the doctor, as he bathed her hot head and hands and soothed her as he would a child, was her mother, and she drew his head close to her lips and whispered:

"O mother! I'm so glad you have come for me! I am tired to death. Auntie has no mercy or feeling for me! She has kept me at work over her night and day, and I've gone hungry many and many a time because I couldn't bear to eat the food so grudgingly given. O I am so glad you have come!"

Now Meta was not a beautiful girl, though she had a sweet, pure, womanly face, and great wistful eyes, and an abundance of dark silky hair. But her small hands were brown and hardened with toil; she was poor, dependent, alone in the world except for this selfish, unnatural aunt, and the cousins who scarcely deigned to notice her.

Doctor Chester was a rich old bachelor, not so very old either, only thirty-six. Why he had never married no one could tell, but true it is he had remained heart-whole all these years in spite of the many beautiful women who had smiled most graciously upon him. But somehow this poor suffering orphan won his heart completely during that week of unconsciousness. He was charmed with her sweet prattle about her childhood; and her innocence and helplessness, together with the suffering he had so unwittingly caused, appealed strongly to his sympathy, and he fully resolved to win her love and make her his wife, if possible. Never had a patient a more assiduous doctor and nurse than did poor Meta. Mrs. Smith fumed and fretted over all the fuss that they made about "that girl," until the doctor frightened her into silence by telling her that he knew how she had treated the poor child, and if she didn't keep quiet and have everything done that was needful for her comfort he would have her arrested and tried for inhuman cruelty. Under his watchful care the danger was soon over, and Meta was pronounced convalescent. The doctor took her out to ride as soon as she was able, in the easiest of all carriages. Rare delicacies were sent every day from the hotel to tempt her returning appetite. The sweetest and most fragrant flowers that could be found adorned her room. Meta remonstrated with him for all this lavish kindness, but he would silence her by saying he was the cause of all her suffering, and she must allow him to atone for it in every way he could. How eagerly he watched the faint color that crept into her cheeks at his approach! How tenderly and delicately he ministered to her comfort and pleasure day by day, until at last he ventured to tell her of his love and his great desire to have her for his own. He had become very dear to her during all those weeks of suffering, and she acknowledged it and promised to be his wife. He hastened to inform Mrs. Smith of their betrothal, and asked her forbearance for another week when, he assured her, he would relieve her from all further care and responsibility of her niece. Imagine if you can her astonishment! She was completely "dumbfounded!" and had not a word to say; though doubtless in her heart she thought it another most "mysterious dispensation."

The next day a notable dressmaker from the city arrived with various wonderful and costly fabrics, which she had orders to make up for Miss Langdon in the latest style. Such a time as there was then of cutting and basting, of trying on and trimming! Two other seamstresses kept their sewing-machines running at the highest rate of speed, until at the close of the week there was enough of a wedding trousseau to fill a huge Saratoga trunk. The doctor made daily pilgrimages between that chamber and the city, until at last he could not devise another thing which his darling could possibly need for dress or ornament during the trip to Europe which he had planned. Never was there a happier bride and groom than those who were made one in Mrs. Smith's parlor that bright September morning. They went immediately to his beautiful home on the Hudson, where his mother received the new daughter with open arms, and soon after went to Europe, where they spent a year. Meta made good use of the time by putting herself under the care of the best private teachers, and when on their return the happy doctor presented his wife to his friends, there was not among them one more highly accomplished or more elegant and refined. The doctor was very proud of her, and never tired of telling his intimate friends how he found his wife, or the result of his Last Shot.—Hearth and Home.

India Shawls.

Of late years the retail trade in camels' hair or India shawls has assumed such proportions that it is beginning to be regarded as one of the most important branches of the dry goods business. There are not more than four importers of these shawls in New York, and the entire trade of the country in these articles is in their hands, the cost of the goods putting it beyond the power of country dealers to carry an assorted stock. The prices of shawls range from $400 to $3,000, and, therefore, to keep large assortments, and to hold stocks of varied patterns and different make, requires the investment of large sums, which only the mammoth houses of this city can afford to make. The force of this statement will be admitted when it is known that the present stock of the Broadway establishment is estimated at $600,000. India shawls are named Decca, Delhi, Bombay, Calcutta, Umritzer, etc., after the districts in which they are made.

The labor, however, is what chiefly determines the value of the shawl, even when the texture is not the finest. The retail trade begins with the coming of autumn and lasts until late in the winter. It would be interesting to know how much money is expended in one season in the purchase of these goods; but as the dealers are always unwilling to make a statement of their business it is impossible to arrive at the fact with any degree of accuracy. Some idea of the magnitude of the trade may be formed, however, from the statement of a manager of the shawl department of a firm doing a large business in that class of merchandise in this city, who informed a reporter of the Tribune that twenty was the average daily sale of India shawls in his department.—New York Tribune.

Silk in America.

Proof of the healthful growth of silk culture and manufacture in the United States is given in the following brief citation from an elaborate article in the New York Times: Since the home manufacture of silk got a firm footing, the importation of the article has fallen off, and in the nine months completed of 1873 the importations of silk have been much less than in the corresponding nine months of 1871 and 1872. For instance, in 1871 the quantity of imported silk entered for consumption amounted in value to $23,884,153, and for warehousing $6,760,233, giving a total of $30,644,386. In 1872 the total was $31,012,608, and for the corresponding months of this year it is reduced to $22,761,818, or $7,882,568 less than 1871, and $8,250,790 less than in 1872. The total dry goods imports for 1873 of wool, cotton, flax, silk and those coming under the denomination miscellaneous, are $10,977,996 less than in 1871 and $19,558,210 less than in 1872. It will be thus seen that the decrease of silk importation represents one-third of the decrease in the dry goods importations. Now, with this falling off in imports of silk, the looms of the country are at work and the demands of consumers are steadily met, while there is no increased cost to the consumer. The silk trade of America is, in truth, at present an established fact. Within the past ten years it has quadrupled itself. It now gives employment to more hands than the silk trade of France, and has shown a progress which passes beyond that of England or any of the other European countries.

Chasing Your Hat.

The moaning winds of November, carrying sadness to our hearts and high plug hats under country wagons, are here. It behooves every man to take every care of his health, and hang on to his hat. But, as some will be apt to neglect their hats in their anxiety for their health, we have thought fit to give the following advice for their recovery: When you feel your hat lifting, immediately plunge your hands into your hair and give it a twist. This will attract the attention of everybody to you, and make you feel as if you were not quite alone in the world. Then, as soon as your hair lifts from you eyes, and enables you to see your hat skimming along the road, start for it. Don't trot after it, but gallop, and while you gallop, smile. A smile goes a good ways on such an occasion. It cuts off other smiles by showing what an excellent joke chasing a hat is, and that you like it. Don't turn out of the way for other people. Some of those you meet may not take that interest in the affair a neighbor should, and if you can knock them down and step on them they will become thoroughly engrossed in the subject at once. As soon as you see your hat stop immediately slacken your gait; you can renew it again as soon as it starts up; and when you get right opposite to it immediately prostrate yourself upon it, and then get up and go for it again. Never fail to fall down upon it when you can, as it gives the beholder better satisfaction, and at the same time relieves the chase of much of its monotony. Don't forget your smile. This is one of the most attrative features of the whole performance, and should not be omitted on any consideration. The moment you stop smiling, people will think it is all an accident, and, losing their tempers, will commence to gibe you. When you have the hat fairly within your reach, give it a good kick, and then chase it again, and when you are surfeited with the amusement, jam it down on your head without smoothing your hair, and dart into the first store to warm yourself. —Danbury News.

Death from a Wasp's Sting.

An English laborer recently died from the sting of a wasp. The London Lancet says he was stung on the tongue, but no sting or mark of a sting could be found. The patient was put to bed, and fomentations as hot as he could bear were applied to his throat. The part where he complained of pain, and where he said he had been stung, was brushed with liquor ammonia diluted so as to be borne by the doctor without much inconvenience when applied to his own tongue. Pulse, sixty-four; respiration, thirty-four, not particularly labored and not strikingly larygeal in character. The patient seemed better for the fomentations and application of ammonia to his tongue, and expressed the comfort he felt, when suddenly, about half a minute after an application of ammonia, he was seized with spasm of the glottis, his face became pale, with drops of perspiration on the forehead, and his arms were thrown out as if to grasp for air (really to assist respiration by means of the pectoral muscles). He said, "I shall choke!" and got out of bed and stood upright, but with no improvement, for he sank on the bed again, his face became livid, he ceased to breathe, and his pulse stopped. Notwithstanding that artificial respiration was kept up and galvanism applied to the cardiac region, the patient died just before the arrival of the senior medical officer of the infirmary, having breathed about four times after tracheotomy was performed, and having been in the infirmary less than half an hour.

An Unexpected Bill.

A few days since, a well-dressed couple in the prime of life, stopped at a hotel in a neighboring town, and, sending for a Justice of the Peace, informed that functionary that they wished to be married. The Justice said, "All right," and inquired their names. After being told, it struck him that he had performed the same service for the lady some years before. Upon inquiring if such was not the case, the lady said she had been married previously. "Have you a bill from your former husband?" asked Mr. Justice.

"Yes," she replied, "I have a bill."

This being satisfactory, the ceremony was performed, and the couple were declared "man and wife." As they were about departing, the Justice, who had never seen a bill of divorce," and having a strong desire to behold the document, thought this an excellent opportunity to satisfy his curiosity. He therefore said to the lady,—

"Have you the bill with you?"

"Oh yes," she replied.

"Have you any objections to allowing me to see the bill?" said our friend.

"None whatever," she replied; stepping to the door, and calling to a little boy some three or four years of age, she said,—

"Here, Bill, come here quick, here is a gentleman that wishes to see you." The gentleman wilted.

WHAT IS JUTE?—Jute is a fibrous plant that grows to a high stalk varying from six to twelve feet high. It is raised in the low-lands of the East Indies. The Jute plantations are operated somewhat on the system of rice plantations. The water used for flooding purposes is taken from rudely constructed reservoirs filled by the melting snow of the Himalaya Mountains. The plant is kept growing in about eighteen inches of water, which prevents the parching rays of a tropical sun from destroying it. When the stalk has attained its growth it is pulled up by the roots or cut off near the roots. It is then laid out in bales like wheat or rye, and prepared for market.

WHAT THE WIND-ELVES HEARD AND SAW.

THE WEST WIND:

The saddest sound I ever heard
Was the wailing plaint of a mother-bird
For the one wee nestling that cheered her nest,
Dead, with a thorn in its pretty breast.

THE SOUTH WIND:

I have known a sight that was sadder still;
There's a grave up yonder, upon the hill,
And a mother weeps at her poor boy's name,
For his ruined soul, and his guilt and shame.

THE WEST WIND:

The sweetest sight that I ever knew
Was the kiss of two lovers whose love was true,
As they pledged themselves, come weal or woe,
One path in life they should henceforth know.

THE SOUTH WIND:

Once, when a weary old man died,
I saw heaven's gates swung open wide,
And his wife, who an angel long had been,
Stretched welcoming hands and cried, "Dear, come in!"
And the look on her face!—I was dumb with awe—
A sight that was grander I never saw.

THE WEST WIND:

Last night, when the stars were out in the blue,
Like a dead white lily kissed by dew,
I saw a baby of two short years
Wet with its mourning mother's tears.

THE SOUTH WIND:

I saw a mother go in one day
Through the gates of heaven, and heard her say
"Is my baby here?" And they put in her arms
A wee child, sweet with a baby's charms;
And she cried as she kissed it, her face aglow,
"I have found my babe! This is heaven, I know!"

THE WORDS OF THE SEA.

The sea has many things to say,
And says them as we wish them said:
To the boy pausing in his play,
It says, "Be quick, bring line and lead."

To the wan lover it displays
Its moon-path o'er the waters white,
And in each breaking crest it says,
"Hope on, I share in your delight."

To the worn man whose restless soul
Has found no haven on life's sea,
It whispers, "Not is this our goal;
We rest but in eternity."

To the proud child of fostering ease,
Whose chariot rolls beside its shore,
A voice invites to ride the seas,
And manhood learn unlearned before.

To the white watcher by the tomb,
Whose heart has fled from him to heaven,
Its phosphor fingers past the gloom
Points to a promise faith has given,

To death it shouts, "Arise and live!"
In organ tones forever more,
Wave after wave, one countless hive
Falls, breaks and thunders on its shore.

PEOPLE who are at a loss as to how many to invite when they want to give "a party," may be guided by the following:

"For thinking, one; for converse, two, no more:
Three for an argument; for walking, four;
For social pleasure, five; for fun, a score."

"WHAT would you have done with a case like that of Tichberne in your country?" asked John Bull of his American cousin. "Well, I guess the jury would have made a joint stock concern of it and divided the proceeds with the party that had the most greenbacks."

"WIFE, what has become of the grapes?" "I suppose, my dear, the hens picked them off," was the bland reply. "Hens—hens!—some two-legged hens, I guess," said the husband, with some impetuosity; to which she firmly replied, "My dear, did you ever see any other kind?"

"MARY, where's the frying-pan?" asked a worthy woman in New Jersey. "Jemmy's got it, carting mud and clam shells up the alley, with the cat for a horse." "The dear little fellow, what a genius he will make! But go and get it, we're going to have company, and must have some fish for dinner."

"You want nothing but a dish-kettle," said an old housewife in the backwoods to her daughter who had just got married. "Why, when your father and I commenced I had nothing but a dish-kettle. I used to boil my coffee in it and pour it into a pitcher; then boiled my potatoes in it and set them on a warm plate while I stewed up the meat in it; used to wash in it, and always, after a meal, I fed the pigs out of the dish-kettle. Sal, if you are only a mind to, you can use it for anything."

An Early Rising Fallacy.

In olden times children were early taught that the instant they woke in the morning they must bounce out of bed, not waiting for a moment's consideration until they were safely landed on the floor. Some wide-awake children, whose eyes naturally opened with the coming dawn, could easily accomplish this feat; but alas for the poor little creatures who found it nearly impossible to shake off the drowsiness that pervaded their entire systems! In a pitiful state of semi-sleep they dragged themselves from bed and tried to dress.

Those who retain vivid remembrances of such experiences of childhood will be gratified to know that Dr. Hall says that up to eighteen years every child should be allowed to rest in bed, after sleep is over, until they feel as if they had rather get up than not; that it is a very great mistake for persons, old or young—especially children and feeble or sedentary persons—to bounce out of bed the moment they wake up; that fifteen or twenty minutes spent in gradually waking up, after the eyes are opened, and in turning over and stretching the limbs, do as much good as sound sleep, because the operations set the blood in motion by degrees, tending to equalize the circulation; for during sleep the blood tends to stagnation, the heart beats feebly and slowly, and any shock to the system sending the blood in overwhelming quantities to the heart is the greatest absurdity.

SHUT THE DOOR!—An Iowa magistrate, before whom a man was brought charged with cuffing a servant's ears "because she left a door open six hundred times," discharged the accused, on the ground that leaving a door open was a technical assault, as it involved bodily injury, and that therefore the cuff administered by the defendant was given in self-defense.

THE high price of meat, together with the low rate of wages in England, has led to the invention of numerous processes for the preservation of animal food, so that supplies of marketable animal food from other countries may be sold in London markets. A dinner of meats preserved by two new processes was recently given at the London Tavern, that a test might be made of the quality of the meat, but the London Times reports that although the meats were well preserved from decomposition, they were unpleasant to both taste and smell, and says that it is questionable whether the laboring classes would accept such meats, even at a low price. By one process the meat was preserved in prepared tallow, "with something in it," and by the other with saltpeter and glycerine.

HEART DISEASE.—Many persons suffer with heart disease without knowing it—suddenly they drop off, and their friends are astonished, on a post mortem examination, to learn that they died of heart disease. The heart, like the brain, is the seat of life—its diseases are of several characters. The most common are valvular disease, fatty degeneration, and functional derangement. If the liver becomes deranged and digestion is impaired, the heart, through sympathy and juxtaposition, becomes abnormal. The following symptoms indicate approaching disease: palpitation, giddiness, faintness, nervous prostration, deranged digestion, vertigo, cold extremities, etc., etc., for which the old school will administer iron, opium, antimony, mercury, and many other mineral poisons. Heart disease is a blood disease—purify the blood; remove obstructions to a limpid circulation by taking that Vegetable Alterative, VINEGAR BITTERS, and you will be a sound person in two or three months.—[Com.

Wood's Household Magazine.

The December number of Wood's Household Magazine is replete with good reading—entertaining sketches, stories, poems, etc., etc. Its table of contents embraces the following articles: "A Better Country," Mary Hartwell; "An Engineer's Yarn," Albert Williams, Jr.; "Our Party at Sea," Rev. J. S. Breckinridge; "Two Enthusiasts," H. M. Lewtral; "Presence of Mind," Rev. F. W. Holland; "Our Babies," D. A. Gorton, M. D.; "Blessedness of Riches," Tenoroon; "Hans Doodledee," Rudolph Mentel; installment of Max Kromer, author of "Jessica's First Prayer;" "Codfish and Potatoes," Chapter II., by Eleanor Kirk; "Misery Jipseau, Chapters VII., VIII., by H. V. Osborne. In addition to these articles are several pretty poems, a charming Little Cottage Design, and editorial departments embracing Our Housekeeper, Correspondence, Literary Notices, Laughing Stock, etc., etc. The engraving for this month is entitled "Old Folks."

All the above for only one dollar per year—or with chromo "Yosemite" one dollar and a half. Address Wood's Household Magazine, Newburgh, N. Y.

The Science of Health.

The December number of this useful magazine is, as usual, filled with many excellent and timely hints upon the all-important subject of health, and the many elements which enter into its consideration. Among the contents of the present number are "The Potential Sex;" "The Model School-Girl;" "What We Want for Health, Comfort, and Improvement at This Season of the Year." L. E. L. considers "Woman's Dress;" and the remaining articles are "Disease and Its Treatment;" "Conceits of Convalescence;" "Walking as a Medicine, and How to Take It;" "Occupation as Affecting Longevity;" "Seasonable Dishes," on Hygienic Principles; "How to Go to Bed;" "California Fruits;" "Yellow Fever;" "Cold Feet, and How to Keep Them Warm." All these subjects are of interest to old and young, and cannot fail to insure for the Science of Health a continued success.

SYMPTOMS OF CATARRH.—Obstruction of nasal passages, discharge falling into throat, sometimes profuse, watery, acrid, or thick and tenacious, mucous, purulent, bloody, putrid, offensive, etc. In others a dryness, weak or inflamed eyes, ringing in ears, deafness, ulcerations, scabs from ulcers, voice altered, nasal twang, offensive breath, impaired smell and taste, etc. Few only of above symptoms likely to be present in any case at one time.

To cure—take Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery earnestly, to correct the blood and system, which are always at fault, also to act specifically, as it does, upon the diseased glands and lining membrane of the nose and its communicating chambers. The more I see of this odious disease, the more positive is my belief that if we would make treatment perfectly successful in curing it, we must use constitutional treatment to act through the blood, as well as a soothing and healing local application. Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, when used warm and applied with Dr. Pierce's Nasal Douche, effects cures upon "common sense," rational and scientific principles, by its mild, soothing and healing properties, to which the disease actually yields, when the system has been put in perfect order by the use of the Golden Medical Discovery. This is the only perfectly safe, scientific and successful mode of acting upon and healing it.

So successful has the above course of treatment proven that the proprietor offers $500 reward for a case he cannot cure. All the means sold by Druggists. R. V. Pierce, M. D., Proprietor, Buffalo, N. Y.

A True Friend of Reform.

The Chicago Tribune was about the first newspaper of prominence in the United States to cut loose from the leadership of a corrupt body of men who had obtained control of the Republican party, and were dragging it down to the lowest depths of degradation, and destroying the most vital interests of the people. No doubt it cost the Tribune a pang to thus virtually cut loose from a party which it had helped to organize, and of which it had been one of the boldest and ablest champions. But it chose to cling to the principles of the party, rather than to the party name without its substance. A terrible outcry was raised at the time that the Tribune had apostacized, and dire vengeance was visited upon it by many Republicans who have since got their eyes open, and now realize that it was only timely leading, where they have since hastened to follow. The Tribune was then, and is now, the fast friend of the producing classes of this country, and the foe of corrupt and designing men. Hence it is with pleasure we call attention to its prospectus in another column, and commend it to all who wish to subscribe for an able, honest and fearless journal that is fully up to the requirements of the time.—*Waukegan (Ill.) CHICAGO
WEEKLY TRIBUNE.

THE LEADING NEWSPAPER IN THE NORTHWEST.

THE PAPER FOR THE FARMER, MECHANIC,
MANUFACTURER,
MERCHANT, BANKER,
PROFESSIONAL MAN, AND THE FIRESIDE.

PROSPECTUS FOR 1874.

The coming year promises to be the most eventful in a political sense that we have seen since the close of the war. The questions which have engrossed and divided the public mind during the past twenty years are rapidly passing away, and we find growing up in different parts of the country a party called by various names—in California the Independent party, in Iowa the Anti-Monopoly party, in Wisconsin the Reform party, in Illinois the Farmers' Movement—having a common purpose and inspiration, and exhibiting a strength which proves that it answers one of the chief demands of the hour. The CHICAGO TRIBUNE will give a large share of its attention to this NEW MANIFESTATION OF PUBLIC SENTIMENT. It holds:

1st. That the old party organizations are essentially corrupt and fraudulent. Having no longer any principles to carry into effect, they have become mere business enterprises, making a show of opposition to each other, but really sharing in the proceeds of profligate and dishonest legislation. To suppose that any healthful reform can flow from the pretended efforts of these worn-out and demoralized partnerships is altogether vain and illusory.

2d. That the tariff system now in vogue is a cunning device to rob the many for the benefit of the few, and that its effect is to cause farm products to exchange for about one-half the quantity of foreign or "protected" goods they would otherwise buy.

3d. That railroads cannot exact more than a fair rate of interest on the capital actually invested in them, and that when, in addition to this, they claim dividends on watered stock and fraudulent bonds, the State may rightfully interfere for the protection of the people; that unjust discriminations between different localities are in violation of law and should be prohibited.

4th. That subsidies or bounties of money, land, or public credit, to railway, steamship, or other corporations are flagrant abuses of the powers of government, fraught with the gravest dangers to the people, and tending to promote corruption, extravagance, speculation, and financial disaster.

The general character of THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE is too well established to need recapitulation. It is always independent and fearless in the expression of its views. In its news department it is second to no paper in the United States. The Weekly Edition contains a carefully prepared summary of the news of the week, brought down to the hour of going to press.

Literary, political, financial, social, and agricultural topics will constitute, as heretofore, leading features of the Weekly Edition, and no pains will be spared to increase its attractiveness in these departments. Its market reports are unsurpassed, embracing all the information which farmers require for the intelligent transaction of business, both as sellers and buyers.

THE WEEKLY TRIBUNE is a large eight-page sheet, of the same size as the Daily Tribune, consisting of fifty-six columns of closely-printed matter, and, as a family newspaper and in its general make-up, is unsurpassed by any paper in the land.

THE TRIBUNE will be furnished during the ensuing year at the following rates, payable in advance:

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,

For Diseases of the THROAT AND LUNGS,
SUCH AS
Coughs, Colds, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis, Asthma and Consumption.

The few compositions which have won the confidence of mankind and become household words among not only one but many nations, must have extraordinary virtues. Perhaps no one ever secured so wide a reputation, or maintained it so long, as AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL. It has been known to the public about forty years, by a long continued series of marvelous cures, that have won for it a confidence in its virtues, never equaled by any other medicine. It still makes the most effectual cures of Coughs, Colds, Consumption, that can be made by medical skill. Indeed the CHERRY PECTORAL has really robbed these dangerous diseases of their terrors, to a great extent, and given a feeling of immunity from their fatal effects, that is well founded, if the remedy be taken in season. Every family should have it in their closet for the ready and prompt relief of its members. Sickness, suffering, and even life is saved by this timely protection. The prudent should not neglect it, and the wise will not. Keep it by you for the protection it affords by its timely use in sudden attacks.

VINEGAR BITTERS

PURELY VEGETABLE
FREE FROM ALCOHOL
DR. WALKER'S CALIFORNIA
EUREKA
VINEGAR BITTERS

Dr. J. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters are a purely Vegetable preparation, made chiefly from the native herbs found on the lower ranges of the Sierra Nevada mountains of California, the medicinal properties of which are extracted therefrom without the use of Alcohol. The question is almost daily asked, "What is the cause of the unparalleled success of VINEGAR BITTERS?" Our answer is, that they remove the cause of disease, and the patient recovers his health. They are the great blood purifier and a life-giving principle, a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the system. Never before in the history of the world has a medicine been compounded possessing the remarkable qualities of VINEGAR BITTERS in healing the sick of every disease man is heir to. They are a gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver and Visceral Organs, in Bilious Diseases.

The properties of DR. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS are Aperient, Diaphoretic, Carminative, Nutritious, Laxative, Diuretic, Sedative, Counter-Irritant, Sudorific, Alterative, and Anti-Bilious.

Grateful Thousands proclaim VINEGAR BITTERS the most wonderful Invigorant that ever sustained the sinking system.

No Person can take these Bitters according to directions, and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and vital organs wasted beyond repair.

Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, which are so prevalent in the valleys of our great rivers throughout the United States, especially those of the Mississippi, Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, Tennessee, Cumberland, Arkansas, Red, Colorado, Brazos, Rio Grande, Pearl, Alabama, Mobile, Savannah, Roanoke, James, and many others, with their vast tributaries, throughout our entire country during the Summer and Autumn, and remarkably so during seasons of unusual heat and dryness, are invariably accompanied by extensive derangements of the stomach and liver, and other abdominal viscera. In their treatment, a purgative, exerting a powerful influence upon these various organs, is essentially necessary. There is no cathartic for the purpose equal to DR. J. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS, as they will speedily remove the dark-colored viscid matter with which the bowels are loaded, at the same time stimulating the secretions of the liver, and generally restoring the healthy functions of the digestive organs.

Fortify the body against disease by purifying all its fluids with VINEGAR BITTERS. No epidemic can take hold of a system thus fore-armed.

Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the region of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia. One bottle will prove a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement.

Scrofula, or King's Evil, White Swellings, Ulcers, Erysipelas, Swelled Neck, Goitre, Scrofulous Inflammations, Indolent Inflammations, Mercurial Affections, Old Sores, Eruptions of the Skin, Sore Eyes, etc. In these, as in all other constitutional Diseases, WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS have shown their great curative powers in the most obstinate and intractable cases.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism, Gout, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have no equal. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood.

Mechanical Diseases.—Persons engaged in Paints and Minerals, such as Plumbers, Type-setters, Gold-beaters, and Miners, as they advance in life, are subject to paralysis of the Bowels. To guard against this, take a dose of WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS occasionally.

For Skin Diseases, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt-Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ring-worms, Scald-head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters.

Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. No system of medicine, no vermifuges, no anthelminitics will free the system from worms like these Bitters.

For Female Complaints, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood, or the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters display so decided an influence that improvement is soon perceptible.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions, or Sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul; your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure, and the health of the system will follow.

The Auburn Courier

Thursday, Dec. 18, 1873.

The Senate yesterday confirmed the appointment of John A. Bingham as Minister to Japan. The good work of reform progress.

Hon. Alex. Stephens celebrated his return to Congress by defending the salary grab. He thinks that the salary of a Congressman ought to be $15,000 per year. Mr. Stephens may be worth that amount of money, but the average Congressman isn't worth more than $5,000.

Let's Hear a Howl.

When the Democrats supported Wood for Speaker, the administration papers howled wonderfully because he was a grabber. The Republican caucus decided last Tuesday to re-elect Carpenter, of Wisconsin, the grabber, debauche and drunkard, president of the Senate, and we venture these virtuous sheets will not raise their noise against the infamy.

"Oh consistency, thou art a jewel." Come boys, can't you whitewash Carpenter's grab, and Long Branch trip?

Speaker Blaine has announced his standing committees. He has placed the salary grabbers and Credit Mobilier men at the front, as chairmen of the leading committees. He has given the foremost place as chairman of the Ways and Means Committee and leader of the House to Dawes, who combines the dishonest greed of of the salary grabber with the odious venality of the Credit Mobilier. A more insolent affront of the just sentiments of honest men of both parties was never offered. Speaker Blaine's political career ends with the present Congress.—World.

Look Up, Farmers.

Ninety-six millions of bushels of wheat, says the Mark Lane Express, will be needed by England this year from other countries to make up the deficiency of food arising from the failure of the potatoes and shortness of her grain crop. France, instead of exporting wheat, is expected to need 48,000,000 of bushels. Thus altogether, it is believed those two countries will need 144,000,000 of bushels. Even rye and barley, yet much used in France for human food, are also deficient in that country. Our farmers have the prospect of a good foreign demand for their grain.

President McMahon has commuted the sentence of Marshal Bazaine to twenty years seclusion, and to bear the effects of degradation from rank, but to be spared the humiliating ceremony.

Marshal Bazaine addressed a letter to his counsel yesterday, thanking them for their efforts in his behalf and requesting them to take no further steps, saying that he should not appeal against his sentence. Strong in his conscience, which reproached him with nothing, he confidently awaits that justification which will come with the lapse of time and the subsidence of party passions.

The conservative papers generally approve of the commutation of the sentence.

The New York Times calls upon Wm. M. Tweed to write out all he knows of the stealings of his regime in New York, and it promises in that event, if he will tell the truth and the whole truth, to use its influence to obtain a mitigation of his sentence. That is Tweed's best course, and if he does it we look for the flight of many of the leading Republicans of the State. It is not yet forgotten that the Tweed charter for New York City which permitted the stealing, received the votes of all the Republican members of the Legislature, although opposed by the party in the city. It will be interesting to know from Tweed how that was done.

George Alfred Townsend, the Washingtom correspondent of the Tribune, seeks to prove the fitness of Attorney General Williams for the position of Chief Justice of the Supreme Court by giving some extracts from a pretty little obituary notice which he made upon the death of ex-Senator Fessenden, of Maine: That proves nothing. A man may be good at that kind of literature, and yet have no knowledge of law. It also may have been written for him by some literary hack or some penny-a-liner. In either event no stock can be taken of his legal ability on account of that speech. If Mr. Townsend can give us any fine legal arguments that Mr. Williams ever made that will be to the point.—Fort Wayne Gazette.

The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad—A New Depot in Washington.

The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company have filed for record in the office of the recorder of deeds, the conveyance from the following parties to them of lots and parcels of ground in Square 86, bounded by North Capitol, D and E streets and Delaware avenue, immediately northeast of the square at present occupied by their depot: N. Acker, $34,000; Metropolis Paving Company, $28,000; A. Rothwell, $18,000; William Gunven, $11,732; James Cowen, $26,000; E. Knight, $2,300; W. Cox, $1,900; John Lynch, $1,170; P. Downey, $906;. The total sum paid was $128,000, and the square contains over 185,000 feet of ground, on which the Company propose to erect a fine depot building of iron and glass. The removal is made necessary in consequence of the grade of North Capitol and C streets and New Jersey avenue having been raised. The Company has also purchased the Queen farm of fifty acres, near Broods Station, on the Metropolitan Branch (three miles out of town,) for $20,000. On this farm they propose to erect workshops and an outer depot, and it is said that they contemplate to make the junction between the Washington Branch and the Metropolitan at that point.—Washington Star.

J. A. BARNS, Conductor.

Examination of Teachers.

Examinations will be held at Auburn, on the first Saturday in each month until further notice.

JAMES A. BARNS, Co., Supt.

Report of Township Institute in Smithfield Township.

According to notice given by M. P. Baker, Trustee of Smithfield township, the teachers met at school house No. 5, on Saturday, Dec. 13th, at ten o'clock. The day being stormy, and the roads very bad, some were not able to attend. Superintendent Barns being present, called the meeting to order, and, after a few remarks, called the role, and then proceeded to the work by organizing a reading class, using the third reader, and giving a practical lesson in teaching that important branch. The exercise was a very interesting one, and, with its discussion, continued until noon. Recess of one hour. At 1 o'clock P. M. the meeting was again called to order, and the subject of arithmetic introduced. Several points were brought up, explained and discussed; among others, the process of finding the true remainder in division of decimals, the different methods of explaining the division of common fractions, the proper method af making statements in proportion and discussions on each.

After this, a short recitation in grammar. The Superintendent urged upon the teachers to make their work in this branch more practical than has been the custom heretofore. The Institute then proceeded to effect a permanent organization. Mr. Barker appointed J. W. Baxter President and S. B. Mottinger Vice-President of the Institute. Mr. W. H. Clark was elected Secretary, motion to that effect having been made by Mr. A. J. Beard. A motion was made and carried that Mr. Barns be requested to draw up a programme for the use of Township Institutes. Work for the next meeting was then assigned as follows: W. H. Clark, long division; N. Cox, map drawing; A. J. Beard, spelling; A. Wolf, penmanship; W. H. Harm, adjectives; S. B. Mottinger, inversion of divisor in division of fractions, and J. W. Baxter, tropics and polar circles. Work for absent members to be assigned at next meeting. Seven out of eleven teachers were present, and, but for the inclemency of the weather, the entire number would probably have attended. A number of visitors attended the meeting and seemed to be much interested in the work. The success of this meeting assures us success in the future. The Institute adjourned to meet at same place on the second Saturday in January, 1874.

W. H. CLARK, Secretary.

Township Institutes will be held as follows:

In Stafford township, at the Center school house, on Saturday, Dec. 20, 1873.

In Union township, at the Husselman school house, on Saturday, Dec. 27, 1873.

We hope to see all the teachers in attendance. Notice of meetings in other townships will appear in this column whenever word is received from the proper trustee, as to time and place. The Superintendent will be present at as many of these Institutes as possible.

ANSWER TO QUESTION.—A, asks: "Can a pupil, attending school, be allowed to remain idle, because he does not wish to study and recite with the others, although he has the necessary books, and is, in all respects qualified to enter such classes?"

Put him in a class and have him study and recite by all means, for a pupil who insists on coming to school should be made to conform to all the rules and regulations of such school, the most important of which are, that each pupil must study, recite and otherwise perform the work of a pupil under such circumstonces.

The new brick school house at Feagler's Corners, is said to be a good job of handiwork, and a lively school is now in operation.

TO ALL WHO DESIRE PLEASANT AND PROFITABLE EMPLOYMENT.

Waterloo is putting on city airs. It has a skating park. For particulars inquire of the Grand Jury.

After the first of January no paper will be sent outside of the county unless prepaid, or vouched for by a resident therein

A little wood is being brought in by our farmers. If the roads don't get better we are afraid this article will get scarce among our town people.

The Jewelry Store, in Ensly's new brick is crowded every evening with people purchasing holiday gifts for their children.—The're so cheap.

The Old Folks' Hop promises to be a grand affair. It will take place at Ensly's new hall January 6th, 1874. Supper will be furnished at the Swineford House.

Hunters seem to be plenty but they dont find very much game. Squirrels are about all they can get, and they don't get more than they can carry, either

The Presbyterian congregation have elected new officers in their Sewing Society, and will continue these gatherings during the winter.

Simon Snyder contemplates erecting a first-class livery barn next spring, and intends putting in a good stock of horses and buggies.

Cedar Creek has been very high the last week, caused by the heavy rains.—Workmen were compelled to stop on the new saw mill until the water lowered.

A lady in the suburbs of the town told her husband the other evening that she would "bust his his head if he came home drunk any more." He'll have a busted head to-night if she keeps her word.

Muffs have not been affected very much by fashion. The fanciest one we have noticed has a small receptacle upon the inside filled with a delicate perfume that oozes out upon the bread hooks of the wearer as she predestrianizes.

If some of the means employed in purchasing things that are not very much needed, was employed in building substantial wood houses in each district, it would be better for our common shools.

Young Bender was tried last week on a charge of assault and battery, found guilty fined $10 and costs, and sent to jail for ten days. The probability is he will remain there longer.

Look in as you pass the show window of the Jewelry Store, and see the nice toys Everyone should call at this establishment before they purchase presents for their children.

The Fort Wayne, Muncie & Cincinnati Railroad changed time last Sunday. The train for Indianapolis and Cincinnati leaves at 12 o'clock and arrives at 3:25 p. m. We will give corrected time table in our next.

The congregation and friends of the German Reformed Church, of which Rev. W. B. Sandoe is pastor will make a donation to said pastor on the second Monday in January. All are invited to be present.

Mr Geismar, of the extensive Hat and Cap establishment of Jas Harper & Co., Fort Wayne, gave us a call last Monday. They make a speciality of Silk Hats, and have an apparatus for taking an impression and making an exact fit to each particular head.

J. W. Nichols, Esq., has formed a pardnership with C. Klotz in the sewing machine trade. They deal in nothing but the Grover & Baker machine, which is universally know as the best in the market.

Every reader of the COURIER should read Root & Company's advertisement on this page. They are a fare and square firm to deal with, and those who visit Ft. Wayne will find it to their advantage to deal at this place.

The Grand Jury recommended the building of a new jail, and we doubt not the people generally would endorse it.—The farmer and mechanic wants some protection against theives and berglers, and the law is powerless if our jail is not a secure retreat for law breakers

Circuit Court is still in session and the criminal docket seems to occupy the grater part of its attention. Petty cases of assault and battery, that ought to be disposed of in Justices' Court, take up the valuable time of this court. The Legislature should pass an act confining them to the lower courts.

The Grand Jury found quite a number of indictments against our saloon men, and the Prosecutor hooped them up pretty lively, though several were quashed C. G. Smith was fined $35 and costs, and Chas. Fox $10 and costs. A bailiff went for Smith a second time, but he gave leg bail and he is now absent.

We intend occupying the rooms now vacant in the second story of the Odd Fellows' building, so that in the muddy season hereafter we will not need a mud boat to reach our office. We intend having the nicest and cleanest office in the State and we invite all to come and see us, especially—well, you know.

It is now expected that the Ameteur Thespian Society, will be able to make their debut on New Years night in two capital pieces, Solon Shigle, or the People's Lawyer, and Barney the Baron. So don't go and spend all your money, but keep 25 cents in reserve for this entertainment.

ST. NICHOLS, FOR JANUARY.—This is the holiday number of Scribner's new magazine for young people, and it comes loaded, not only with its own store of good things for the Christmas time, but with the best of what had been promised to the readers of "Our Young Folks." Address, Scribner & Co., 654, Broadway New York.

Circulate the Courier.

In order to extend the circulation of the COURIER we make the following liberal offers: We will send one copy one year to any address for $2, or two copies for $4. To all those who are in arrears, and who will pay up promptly we will extend the same terms. All hereafter who are in arrears one year, fifty cents additional will be charged.

No clue has been obtained yet of the two men who escaped jail last week. It was clearly not the fault of Sheriff Meese that they escaped. It strikes us that a larger reward should have been offered, and a more vigorous search made for the fugitives. If the law authorzies the construction of a building for the safe confinement of prisoners, and the proper authorities fail to comply therewith, we can not help but think that the responsibility rests with them.

MUSICAL—The chorus class, under Prof Bennett, is advancing rapidly, and is now taking up quite difficult music. The class numbers about twenty-five and meets on Monday evenings at Case's Hall. The Professor is instituting a thorough drill, and great interest is taken by both teacher and pupils. Mrs. Bennett adds largely to the practice by her excellent accompaniments on the organ. The Rudimental class meets Saturday evenings at the same place, and is making rapid progress.

An Election of officers for the N. E. Ind Agricultural Society will be held on the first Monday of January. We are in favor of the election of new officers. By frequent re-elections people get an impression that such associations are run by a clique and there is danger of a Credit Mobiler. Not that any officer has proved unworthy for we believe all discharged their duty faithfully, but they have held the office two terms and that is long enough.

Stop murdering that crew or I will in the absence of an American man of war bombard your town. These are our sentiments and acting under the same Miller & Casebeer have just received a heavy reinforcement of Dry Goods and Notions, and propose to advance their entire line against high prices. The old style of throwing out some cheap muslins, calico or sugar for skirmishers, which are easily gobbled or drove back, is getting too thin. We shall offer special inducements on every article in our immense stock and propose to hold our position at all hazards. Call and see us.

Those who are acting on committees for the christmas trees should call at the Jewelry Store before they purchase Great inducements are being offered in this line, and a great deal might be saved Take heed

How pleasant it is, in this wicked old world to meet a man in the busy walks of life whose face is an open book, bearing the imprint of benesty, whose nobility of soul speaks in his very glances, whose whole demeanor inspires you with a yearning platonic affection for him that only needs cultivation to inspire the possessor to know more of him, and borrow money of him, as it were. Ah, yes.

DRAMATIC.—An ametuer association has been formed for the presentation of a number of fine plays during the winter. A fine set of scenery is now being painted by Mr. Reynolds, of Chicago, and a regular stage with every appointment, will be erected in Ensly's large Hall. Every arrangement will be perfected for the presentation of dramas, comedies, &c., in good style. Nothing of a vulgar character will be permitted, and we doubt not our citizens will appreciate the efforts of our home talent by a liberal patronage.

A communication last week in regard to tardiness of pupils at our school, was blaming parents for the cause of it. Did that teacher take the first thought that he was the full cause of every scholar's tardiness, for this reason: The time at the school house is made from a half to three quarters of an hour faster than the time we are governed by. In the mornings it is school time before our juveniles can get a few chores done and be properly ready to enter the school room. At noon they are compelled to wait till their fathers have quit work, before they can get their meals, and thus originated the tardiness spoken of so earnestly in said communication. G.

"ALL ASHORE."

The good ship, COURIER has arrived in port. She made the voyage around the world in three hundred and sixty-five days. She is on time, with a full cargo; every man at his post, and all in good health. "All ashore!" and each of the voyagers hies away to his home, glad for having seen so much, heard so much and learned so much, which he never can forget. In the next issue she will start on her 4th voyage, and let us hope that it will be a successful one. Several of her passengers will be chucked overboard if they don't pay up a little better. We are now preparing for the new year, and shall be ready to set sail promptly, on the usual date. Those who desire to join us "will please walk up to the captain's office and settle." Let none be late, so that when the bell rings, or whistle sounds you will be on hand with all your friends and ready when the words are given:

"ALL ABOARD FOR 1874!"

More Otherwise than Extraordinary.

The whisky apologist of the Press, and that is Baxter, does not speak flatteringly of our Methodism. From time immemorial the greatest trial of the christain has been that of persecution. Our persecutors are not numerous and we are glad that in this particular they are confined to the brilliant blackguard of the Press.

The truly good Baxter, champion of the whisky ring, says he has notified the saloon keepers of Waterloo, not to let us have any more "beverages" Had he done this sometime ago, it would have been money in pocket, as far as he is concerned.

Champion Baxter, we learn, has paid to the Temperance Society the amount necessary to become a member, but not being able to attend himself, for sundry reasons, he has prevailed on another citizen to act as substitute. Now, could he get the same person to dodge around through the alleys about meal time, so as to relieve himself of the burthen of asking any of his relatives to join him he would be accomplishing another feat equally as important.

We suggest that our good natured but wayward brother, Baxter, get a copy of that petition with his name attached, and have it framed for the benefit of his little boys, you know. They will enjoy a look at it now and [illegible] after life.

Stop in at the Jewelry Store and hear that large organ that plays itself Its worth anybodys 50 cent to hear one of its concerts but no charge is made

The petition by Geo Downend for change of highway in Richland tp., commencing on the township line between section 32 and 33, thence north 12 roads on section line. Viewers appointed W Teeters, Jas Barclay, Danl Swihart.

The following is the report of the Grand Jury:

The Grand Jury of said county would respectfully represent to your honor that they have duly visited and examined the County Jail, and find that it is kept as well as it can be in its present condition but we find it wholly unfit for the safe keeping of prisoners who may be confined therein, and unhealthy, being badly ventilated and would recommend the building of a new jail for the safe protection and health of the prisoners who may be confined therein, that it is not practicable to make improvements thereon.

ABRAHAM M. COY, Foreman

S J Lock and R Till, having complied with the requirements of the law were granted license to sell intoxicating liquors for one year, the same to be drank on their premises.

Our Schools.

The fall term of the Auburn Graded Schools closed Friday, Nov. 26, 1873. All the departments of the schools have been crowded, and at times was impossible to find places for all. Nevertheless the examinations of last week showed that the several teachers had done their work creditably. Below we give the most important statistics of each department.

Do Not! Do Not!! Do Not!!!

Do not employ such physicians as give you opium, laudanum, morphine or hydrate of chloral to stop your pain or cough, as those narcotics will not cure the disease, but only lull you to certain death with a false hope. But call or send to Dr. S. Clay Todd, No. 4 East Columbia street, Fort Wayne, who will give you immediate relief by removing the cause of the disease, and there will be no more pain, and you will rapidly recover your full health and strength.

Washington.

Under the title of "A bill to provide for the permanent and cheap transportation of passengers and freight between the cities of New York and Chicago," Mr. Logan, in the Senate, and Mr. Farwell, in the House, have petitioned Congress to grant a charter for an air-line railroad between the above cities. The provisions of the charter are: On behalf of the corporators, a remission of duties on material used in its construction; the company, in consideration of which remission, agrees to carry Government freight and passengers at rates to be fixed by Congress, and all other freight at not more than 1¼ cents per one hundred weight, and passengers at 2¼ cents per mile....It is reported that President Grant will take sides with Gen. Sickles in his brush with the State Department.... A Washington telegram of the 8th says: "The unofficial press reports continue to give a war-like tone to news from Spain and Cuba. On the other hand, Secretary Fish stated to-day the confidence of the Government in the intention of the Castelar Government to faithfully carry out the provisions of the protocol recently agreed upon is undiminished, and that they have strong reasons for believing that the Castelar Government will be able to do so."....The project to divide the State of Illinois into three judicial districts will be earnestly pressed upon the present Congress. Two bills for that purpose have been introduced in the House. ....The Secretary of the Navy has addressed a communication to the House of Representatives asking for an extra appropriation of $14,000,000 to meet the increased expenses of his department for the current year.

The Postal Telegraph scheme has been introduced into the Senate in the shape of a bill proposed by Senator Ramsey, providing for the transmission of correspondence by telegraph. It is said to be materially the same as the Hubbard claims....Senator Morrill's bill for the resumption of specie payment authorizes the negotiation of a loan of $200,000,000 gold bonds at 6 per cent. interest, the proceeds to be used in redeeming United States non-bearing-interest notes in gold when presented in sums of not less than $100, the notes to be reissued at the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury in payment of all Government dues except United States bonds and the interest thereon. The bill also repeals the limitation of national bank circulation, and provides for $100,000,000 loan-certificates, bearing 3.65 per cent. interest, which may be held by the national banks to the amount of one-half their reserve required by law.... A Washington dispatch says: "Mark W. Delahay, the United States Judge of Kansas, has tendered his resignation. Official charges had been preferred against him that he is a common drunkard. Crozier, the present pro tempore Senator from Kansas, is indorsed to fill the vacancy."....A Washington telegram of the 10th inst. says: "The President, in conversation to-day with a number of prominent gentlemen, was at pains to express his entire confidence in the speedy settlement of the Virginius case in a manner which would be entirely satisfactory to our own people and highly honorable to both nations. The tenor of his remarks was that recent advices are such as to lead to the opinion he had expressed. He said, finally, quite emphatically, and as if to sum up: 'Gentlemen, there will be no war.'"....It is stated that the European members of the Syndicate have signified their intention to withdraw if Jay Cooke & Co. continue to be members....There is the best of authority and of reason, says a Washington correspondent, for believing that no essential changes in the tariff will be made by Congress this year. There is said to be no probability that the duties on tea and coffee will be restored this winter, although there is alleged to be a strong movement to secure it.

The Senate has confirmed the nominations of Marshall Jewell, as Minister to Russia, and James Meredith Read as Minister to Greece. ....The President has appointed Col. James H. Howe, Judge of the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Wisconsin. ....A Washington dispatch of the 10th inst. says: The Navy Department has completed all the necessary arrangements providing for the reception from the Spanish forces in the harbor of Havana of the steamer Virginius, and for the transfer of the survivors at Santiago de Cuba from prison to one of the United States vessels of war, in accordance with the terms of the diplomatic agreement. The Canandaigua, carrying ten guns, and commanded by Capt. Lowry, will sail from New York for Havana to-morrow to receive the Virginius, and Capt. Brain will receive the prisoners at Santiago on the Juniata. Rear-Admiral Scott, at Key West, will have the strongest naval force under his command that has been collected by the Government at any American port since the termination of the war.

Foreign.

The French throw the blame for the Ville du Havre disaster upon the officers of the Loch Earn, while the Scotch put the responsibility upon the French....The House Committee on Appropriations have reported a bill giving Secretary Robeson $5,000,000 extra appropriations for the year's expenses of the Navy Department. Mr. Robeson asked for $14,000,000.

The trial of Marshal Bazaine before a military court of France, which began on the 6th of October last, was concluded on the 10th of December. The court found the accused guilty of the capitulation of Metz and of the surrender of the army in an open field without proper efforts to avert that consummation, and sentenced him to be first degraded from his rank in the army and then executed. The members of the court immediately signed a petition to President MacMahon for clemency. It is probable that this petition will be granted....Baron Reuter has allowed the date of his Persian concession to lapse, and the Shah has declared it void.

Political.

At the Republican Senatorial caucus at Washington, on the 9th inst., the Carpenter matter was very fully discused, that gentleman being absent, but as the Senators did not deem the charges well founded or worthy of notice, they were ignored, and he was accordingly re-elected President pro tempore.... Four women were elected on the School Committee, at the recent municipal election in Boston. S. C. Cobb, Citizens' candidate, was elected Mayor.

The Grange.

The Illinois State Grange convened at Bloomington on Tuesday, Dec. 2, and was largely attended, between 600 and 700 delegates being present. State Master Golder opened the proceedings in an address of considerable length, after which the committees were appointed. Having thus prepared themselves for work, the session adjourned till next day....The State Grange of Iowa met at Des Moines on the 9th in the Assembly Chamber of the Capitol. The Master, Col. Smedley, delivered the annual address, which was highly applauded. He reports an increase of 1,050 subordinate granges during the year. The present aggregate membership is 100,000. At the evening session a number of speeches were made on the subject of railroads, all of them taking a radical position. The canvass for officers for the ensuing year, it is said, will be lively, there being already several candidates for each office in the field. A lecture delivered by Mrs. Annie Savery in the court-room in the evening upon the subject of "Grange and Grangers," was listened to and highly enjoyed by a large audience.

The second day's session of the Illinois State Grange, at Bloomington, opened with 730 delegates in attendance. The morning session was occupied in the presentation of resolutions, which were referred to the appropriate committees. The convention passed a resolution advising farmers not to deal with the combination of plow-makers, embracing some twenty firms, which, a short time ago, decided to sell to grangers at nothing less than retail prices. Other resolutions were adopted which wisely urged the members to resort to arbitration for the settlement of disputes, with the purpose of avoiding litigation as much as possible. A resolution was also adopted declaring that "the election to responsible offices of brothers who are editors, publishers or proprietors of public journals has a tendency to weaken our influence as an organization." The following dispatch was sent to the State Grange of Iowa: "Brothers: Seven hundred strong, we send you a cordial greeting, and trust our mutual deliberations may result in great good to our order. Allow us to congratulate you on the glorious success of our esteemed order in your State, and may you be assured that we are coming, a hundred thousand more. Fraternally yours, Alonzo Golder, in behalf of the Illinois State Grange"....There was an increased attendance at the second day's meeting of the State Grange of Iowa, at Des Moines. The Secretary's report was submitted, showing a tardiness in granges in reporting their dues to State officers, and advising a reduction of dues when paid promptly. The State Treasurer's report shows receipts from all sources of $18,080.79; expenditures, $7,683.67; balance in the Treasury, $10,397.12. The report of the Executive Committee was submitted. They say they have purchased the Warner harvester—the best made—for the purpose of manufacturing it at home; and say that the machine can be made for $100. The committee concludes its report as follows: "Our order is now measurably cut loose from all combinations, and it now remains for us to demonstrate to the world the fact which we have so long claimed, that our order is able to devise ways and means for providing implements, and at very much reduced prices, to meet the demands of the farmers. We have now manufactured within the bounds of our own State almost all the implements used by the producing classes, and an opportunity is now offered us of manifesting our fidelity to principle by concentrating our strength within our own State, and upon given implements, the manufacturers of which are not only willing, but desirous of entering into commercial relations with us." The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: Grand Master, A. B. Smedley (re-elected); Overseer, J. M. Dixon, Mahaska county; Lecturer, J. Wilkinson, Tama county; Steward, D. W. Prindle, of Webster county; Assistant Steward, J. N. Thatcher, of Van Buren county; Treasurer, M. L. Devin, of Polk county; Chaplain-General, W. Wilson, of Polk county; Secretary, N. W. Garretson, of Madison county; Gate-Keeper, D. E. Pickens, of Fremont county; Lady Assistant Steward, Mrs. A. B. Smedley; Ceres, Mrs. Spencer Day, of Marshall county; Pomona, Mrs. Cole, of Jasper county; Flora, Mrs. White, of Howard county; State Agent, J. D. Whiteman. By resolution, delegates to the State Grange were allowed mileage at 10 cents per mile one way, and $1.50 per diem during the season.

General.

A Cuban gentleman, who returned from Washington this morning, states that he conversed with Secretary Fish and several Senators, and they assured him that any further diplomacy with Spain on the Virginius question would be declined. They believed the Spanish authorities in Cuba would refuse to accede to the propositions of the protocol, and war would probably be the consequence.

Carefully compiled figures, prepared at Detroit, show that the total of minor disasters on the lakes this year is 1,021, of which 350 were caused by collisions, 50 by capsizing, 5 by running ashore, and 21 injuries by fire. The total losses number 78, and this includes a few vessels now ashore, which may subsequently be got off....Gen. N. B. Forrest, the ex-Confederate cavalry commander, has written to Gen. Sherman, tendering from 1,000 to 5,000 troops in case of war with Spain, to rendezvous at Mobile, New Orleans, or Key West, and to be used either as infantry or cavalry. Gen. Sherman, in reply, notifies Gen. Forrest that he has referred his letter to the War Department to be filed, with the indorsement that he regards Gen. Forrest as one of the most extraordinary men developed in our civil war, and that his would be among the first services to be accepted.

Secretary Belknap was married to Mrs. A. T. Bowen, of Cincinnati, at Harrodsburg, Ky., on Thursday, the 11th inst.

The Supreme Court of the United States has just made a very important decision, on the question as to the right of a State to control the charges of railroads. The case was that of Fuller vs. the Chicago and Northwestern railroad, and the court held that it was competent for the State of Iowa to regulate railroad freights, because such a law is within the power of the State to protect its citizens from imposition.

A Simple Water-Test.—Good water should be free from color, unpleasant odor and taste, and should quickly afford a lather with a small portion of soap. The following simple test to show whether water is fit for general use is given in a recent paper by Herr Heisch on the pollution of water by sewage. If half a pint of water be placed in a perfectly clean, colorless, glass-stoppered bottle, a few grains of the best white lump-sugar added, and the bottle freely exposed to the daylight in the window of a warm room, the liquid should not become turbid even after exposure for a week or ten days. If the water becomes turbid, it is open to the grave suspicion of sewage contamination; but if it remain clear, it is almost certainly safe.

The Best Bear Story of the Season.

The Roseburg (Oregon) Plaindealer relates: A correspondent writing from Canyonville sends us the following interesting incident which occurred near that place: About ten days since, Henry Blann and his wife, of Canyonville precinct, went out into the mountains to look after their sheep. When about three miles from home his two dogs got after a bear, and after a severe chase succeeded in compelling the bear to climb a tree. About the time that Mr. Bland and his wife reached the foot of the tree another ferocious bear put in an appearance and savagely attacked the dogs in the immediate presence of Mr. and Mrs. Bland. The fight now became animated and furious, dogs and bear rolling over each other in the death struggle down a deep mountain into the canyon below. Bland was armed with a Henry rifle, but dared not shoot for fear of killing his dogs. Now came the question how to rescue the dogs; only two cartridges were in the rifle, and these had to be used to the best advantage. Mrs. Bland urged her husband to go to the assistance of the dogs, while she, alone and unarmed, undertook to keep the ferocious monster up the tree. He started down into the canyon to where the conflict was raging, guided by the growls and yelps of the dogs and bear. He arrived not a moment too soon, for Bruin was evidently getting the best of it, and would only be pacified by the last shot from the now empty rifle.

It was dark when Bland returned to his wife at the foot of the tree. The situation was anything but flatttering. The empty rifle was of little use, and upon the determination of Mrs. Bland to sit up with the bear, he started for home for more ammunition. The lady, being reinforced by the bleeding dogs, now felt sure that she was mistress of the situation. With no fire, far from home, in the midst of craggy mountains, this indomitable lady dared to hold at bay one of the most ferocious monsters of the forest. The bear, not liking his new home, determined to descend the tree, but our heroine, with a stick and the barking of dogs, compelled Bruin to take a sober second thought, and, taking up a position on a lower limb, with eyeballs of fire he stared at the scene below; but our huntress was not dismayed by the presence of her horrible companion, but stood guard until 10 o'clock, when her husband and another man came to her assistance. She then started for home through the deep canyons and gorges of the mountains entirely alone, and it was midnight when she safely arrived at her own dwelling.

The next morning, as soon as it was sufficiently light, the bear was shot. He proved to be one of the largest of those known as the cinnamon variety.

Madame Du Barry's Last Moments.

The execution of the notorious Countess Du Barry is described as follows by an eye-witness: "Upon arriving at the Pont au Change I found a very large crowd assembled there. I had no need to ask the reason of the assemblage, for at that moment I heard the most terrible cries, and almost immediately saw come out of the court of the Palace of Justice that fatal cart which Barrere has called 'the bier of the living.' A woman was in that cart, which slowly drew near the spot upon which I was standing. Her figure, her attitude, her gestures, expresed the most frightful despair. Alternately red and deathly pale, she struggled with the executioner and his two assistants, who could scarcely hold her upon the bench, and uttering those piercing cries which had first arrested me, she turned incessantly from one to the other invoking pity. It was Madame du Barry, being conveyed to execution. Only about forty-two or forty-three years of age, she was still, in spite of the terror which disfigured her features, remarkably beautiful. Clothed wholly in white, like Marie Antoinette, who had preceded her a few weeks previously on the same route, her beautiful black hair formed a contrast similar to that presented by a funeral pall cast over a coffin. 'In the name of heaven,' she cried amidst her tears and sobs, 'save me, save me! I have never done ill to any one; save me!" The delirious frenzy of this unfortunate woman produced such an impression among the people that those who came to gloat over her sufferings had not the courage to cast at her a word of insult. Every one around appeared stupefied, and no cries were heard but hers—but hers were so piercing that I believe they would have drowned even those of the mob had they been uttered. During the whole route she never ceased her shrieks for 'Life! life!' and to struggle frantically to elude death, which had seized upon her already. Upon arriving at the scaffold it was necessary to employ force to attach her to the fatal plank, and her last words were, 'Mercy! mercy! But one moment longer, but one——' and then all was still."

Wonderful.—Although the eye of some animals is incapable of motion, as the fly, the beetle, and several other insects, yet the Creator has shown His wisdom and goodness in furnishing their eyes with thousands of little globules and by placing their eyes more in front of their head, so that these little insects can see all around them without turning their heads. A gentleman who has examined the eyes of a common fly says that the two eyes are composed of 8,000 little globules, through every one of which it is capable of forming an image or an object. Having prepared the eye of a fly for the purpose, he placed it before his microscope, and then looked through both, in the manner of the telescope, at a steeple which was 288 feet high, and 750 distant, and he said he could plainly see through every little hemisphere, the whole steeple inverted, or turned upside down.

The new Trinity College buildings at Hartford are to consist of four quadrangles, and they will contain within them nearly four acres of ground. The plans contemplate furnishing accommodation for three hundred students, though at first dormitories for only one hundred and fifty will be erected. The plans have been prepared by a London architect, and the architecture is to be the early English which flourished in the thirteenth century.

BURRIEL'S BUTCHERY.

The First Connected Account of the Executions at Santiago—A Sickening Narrative.

[New York (Dec. 5) Cor. Chicago Times.]

The Morning Star, from Santiago de Cuba, arrived here this morning. The Morning Star was in port at Santiago when the Virginius was brought there, and during the week of executions. The second mate, Coffin, gives a graphic description of the scenes of that memorable period, and incidents, many of which are new. Mr. Coffin is an intelligent and respectably-connected young American. His narrative is corroborated in every detail by the other officers of the Morning Star. He says that the Virginius was convoyed in by the Tornado and another Spanish man-of-war on the evening of the 1st ult. It is not true that the inhabitants of Santiago were wild with joy. On the contrary, they were excessively quiet, and no demonstration whatever was made. The American flag, which had been borne at the mast-head of the captured vessel, lay conspicuously upon her quarter-deck, to be trampled upon by her captor's crew, and was not removed until the next evening. On Sunday afternoon the prisoners were landed by the Tornado's boats. All, with the exception of Ryan, Varona, Del Sol and Cespedes, had their elbows pinioned behind and their hands handcuffed in front. This treatment of the four latter seemed to be a sort of mock respect to their supposed leadership. After they had all been drawn up upon the wharf, they were marched in the center of a strong guard to the prison. At 6:45 on Tuesday morning, Ryan, Varona, Del Sol and Cespedes were conducted to the slaughter-house, a walk of about ten minutes. Ryan wore a blue shirt over his white shirt, with a silver star on the breast, and trudged gaily along as if going to his wedding. He smoked a cigar the entire route, and did not throw it away until the moment came for the firing. A priest advanced to his side and offered the consolations of religion, but Ryan waved him off. Even the Spanish officers were loud in their admiration of the coolness and indifference with which he met his death. The American Consul having attempted a protest, Gen. Burriel placed a double row of sentinels around the consulate, thus keeping our representative a virtual prisoner until after the conclusion of the butcheries. At 4 o'clock on Friday afternoon, Capt. Fry and 36 of his crew were shot. Mr. Coffin witnessed their execution from the wall of the slaughter-house.

The victims were ranged facing the wall, and at a sufficient distance from it to give them room to fall forward. Capt. Fry having asked for a glass of water, one was handed him by Charles Bell, the steward of the Morning Star. Fry then walked from the end of the line to the center, and calmly awaited his fate. He was the only man that dropped dead at the first volley, notwithstanding the fact that the firing party were but a distance of ten feet away. Then ensued a horrible scene. The Spanish butchers advanced to where the wounded men lay writhing and moaning in agony. and placing the muzzles of their guns in some instances into the mouths of their victims, pulled the triggers, shattering their heads into fragments. Others of the dying men grasped the weapons thrust at them with a despairing clutch, and shot after shot was poured into their bodies before death quieted them. P. O. Sanderson, the first mate of the Morning Star, who was standing on the bridge of his vessel when the first volley was fired, says that for about ten minutes the firing reminded him of a Fourth of July celebration. All the bodies were tumbled into carts and taken at once to the cemetery. Mr. Coffin says that this batch of victims, at least, seemed to have no notion of the fate that awaited them. They walked along quite merrily, singing, chatting, laughing and smoking, as if on a pleasure party. On the following morning twelve Cubans were led to the slaughter, and similar disgusting scenes were re-enacted. The moment the preliminary order was given the twelve turned their heads as if in obedience to a preconcerted agreement, and throwing their hands aloft, shouted "Vive Cuba libre." This finished the executions. That day the British war vessel Niobe arrived. Her commander, Lambton Lorraine, left Jamaica in such haste that several of his crew who were ashore on leave were left behind. He hardly stopped to cast anchor at Santiago before he hastened ashore, and protested against the killing of any more of the Virginius crew. Gen. Burriel answered him saucily in a letter, saying that any executions that had been ordered would be proceeded with. Commander Lorraine instantly returned a reply to the effect that, in the absence of an American man-of-war, he would protect not only the interests of his own country, but those of the United States, and that if Gen. Burriel harmed the hair of another prisoner's head he would bombard the city. It was generally believed at Santiago that this action of the British commander saved the lives of the rest of the Virginius crew. Commander Lorraine afterward obtained five copies of the process of the court-martial condemning them to death, two of which he intended to transmit to our Government and two others to his own. Mr. Coffin closed his narrative by the assertion that he would have been shot by the Spanish volunteers, but that they believed him to be a British subject, his vessel sailing under British colors.

New Use for Steam.

Apropos of a project for keeping the Erie canal from freezing by means of steam-pipes, the Springfield Daily Union "goes one better." It proposes to prevent railroads from being blocked up with snow by making the rails hollow, and filling them with steam, so that the snow would melt on them as it fell. In both cases it is probable that steam is suggested because the projects would not hold water. Some years ago a Mr. Witkin, an English engineer, proposed to keep the St. Lawrence at Quebec open during the winter by projecting a stream of boiling water into it; but as is too often the case with the inspirations of great intellects, the project was suffered to collapse for want of faith in it.

Patrons of Husbandry and their Number.

The weekly circular issued here from the office of the National Grange gives a statement of the number of subordinate and State Granges, which illustrates in a striking manner the rapid growth of the organization. On Saturday, the date of latest dispatch, the total number of Granges was 8,574; the membership being 643,125. From the 1st to the 22d inst. the number of Granges organized was 789. During the present year, so far, the number of new Granges organized is 6,257, distributed as follows: January, 153; February, 347; March, 665; April, 571; May, 696; June, 625; July, 612; August, 829; September, 919; October, 1,050; November (22d), 789. The highest number organized during any month of 1872 was 120; the lowest, 54.

The following States have no State Granges: Alabama, 266 subordinate Granges; Delaware, none; Florida, 18; Kentucky, 68; Louisiana, 38; Maryland, 14; Maine, 1; Massachusetts, 14; New Jersey, 21; New Hampshire, 9; Virginia, 9. Of Territories, there are Colorado, 2; and Washington 5, while Canada has 8 Granges.

State Granges are organized in the following States and Territories, while the number of subordinate Granges named are included in each jurisdiction: Arkansas, 93; California, 117; Georgia, 395; Illinois, 748; Indiana, 633; Iowa, 1,833; Kansas, 679; Michigan, 130; Minnesota, 379; Mississippi, 480; Missouri, 1,097; Nebraska, 350; New York, 24; North Carolina, 120; Ohio, 218; Oregon, 45; Pennsylvania, 48; South Carolina, 190; Tennessee, 229; Texas, 37; Vermont, 31; West Virginia, 22; Wisconsin, 251, and in Dakota, 30. The total number of Granges in the South, or rather former slave States, is 2,946.

In New England there are but forty-four Granges organized, and none are found in Connecticut or Rhode Island. Delaware is the only other State without a Grange up to date. The order has grown with great rapidity in the former slave States, especially those in the further South. Singularly enough, the order has its largest existence in South Carolina, as far as the South is concerned. No question of color has yet arisen, and it is believed that that matter is easily controlled. The largest number of organized Granges are found in Kansas, according to population, while Iowa and Missouri give the largest percentage of membership. So far the Southern adhesions are from the small plantation-holders, and appear to be a desirable acquisition.—Washington Correspondence St. Louis Globe.

Former Chief Justices.

The nomination of Attorney-General Williams for Chief Justice of the United States is a respectable appointment, but not the best that could be made. When Grant was in the army everybody gave him credit for selecting the right man for the right place, and it is possible his traditional sagacity has led him aright in this instance, but we have our doubts about it. The six men who have already held the position of Chief Justice were eminent in public affairs before they were appointed, and have all left brilliant records behind them. John Jay, the first Chief Justice, had been Governor of New York, its Chief Justice, President of the Continental Congress, Minister to Spain, and Secretary for Foreign Affairs under the Confederation. While he was Chief Justice of the United States, he was appointed by Washington Minister to England, the appointment not being at the time considered incompatible with his judicial position. John Rutledge, the second Chief Justice, had been President of the colony of South Carolina, Governor of the State, and its representative in the Continental Congress. Oliver Ellsworth, the third Chief Justice, had been Justice of the Superior Court of Connecticut, and a Senator in Congress from that State. While he was Chief Justice he was appointed special Minister to France, and continued to hold both offices at the same time. John Marshall, the fourth Chief Justice, had been a member of the Executive Council of Virginia, a member of the Legislature of that State and of the convention of the State called to ratify the Constitution of the United States, Minister to France, member of Congress, and Secretary of State. He was Secretary of State when he was appointed Chief Justice, and he held both offices until the close of the administration of Mr. Adams. Roger B. Taney, the fifth Chief Justice, had been Attorney-General of the United States and Secretary of the Treasury. Mr. Chase, the sixth Chief Justice, had been twice Governor of Ohio, Senator of the United States from that State, and Secretary of the Treasury.—Milwaukee Sentinel.

Postal Savings Depositories.—Postmaster-General Creswell, in his annual report, makes a strong plea for the establishment of postal savings banks, though he protests against this name for the proposed institution. The general details of his scheme are pretty well known. All money-order post-offices, as agents of the Government, would receive deposits in small sums, ranging from one dollar up to the limit fixed by law. This money the post-master would forward to the nearest depository of the United States Treasury. The postmaster would give the depositor a certificate fixing the responsibility of the Government for the amount of the deposit, on which he would receive interest at the rate of 4 per cent. a year, dating from the first day of the month after the deposit is made. No single depositor would be permitted to deposit above three hundred dollars in one year, nor more than a thousand dollars in all; and interest on deposits may be allowed to accumulate until principal and interest amount to fifteen hundred dollars. The moneys thus deposited go directly into the United States Treasury, which is responsible for their payment.

The bear of the Arctic region does not hug, but bites his opponent, declining to eat his captive until life is extinct. Like a cat, he plays with his victim, whose only refuge when attacked is to "play dead," so that when the bear retreats to enjoy the prospect of his meal, the gun can be got ready when he returns.

South Carolina.—A correspondent draws a melancholy picture of the decadence of South Carolina. He estimates that over 90 per cent. of the farmers have lost money since the war, and mentions one 3,000-acre tract of land that has been sold four times under the Sheriff's hammer since 1865. Before the war, he says, the taxable property of South Carolina was valued at about $488,000,000; in 1870 it had fallen to $84,000,000, and the decrease has been steadily progressing up to the present time; but the taxation before the war was only a little over $400,000 annually, while the taxation in 1870 was about $2,100,000, yet the State taxation debt has increased from $6,000,000 to something between $16,000,000 and $20,000,000.

A Cure.—To the unfortunate victim of drunkenness we recommend the following cure: A mixture made up as follows, and taken in quantities equal to an ordinary dram, and as often as the desire for strong drink returns, will cure the worst case of drunkenness: Sulphate of iron, five grains; peppermint water, eleven drachms; spirits of nutmeg, one drachm. This preparation acts as a tonic and stimulant, and partially supplies the place of the accustomed liquor, and prevents the absolute physical and moral prostration that follows from a sudden breaking off from the use of stimulating drinks. It is to be taken in quantities equal to an ordinary dram, and as often as the desire of a dram returns.

Immigration Statistics.

The report of the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics says:

The importance of obtaining and publishing accurate statistics, not only of the ages, sexes and ports of arrival, but of the nationalities and occupations of the large and increasing number of immigrants, has imposed additional duties on this division. Special efforts have been made to induce greater accuracy on the part of those who originally record the data, so that the compilations published by the Bureau may be full and trustworthy. The importance to our country of this annual influx of foreign-born citizens requires more than ordinary care in the presentation of the facts. Probably no emigrants from Continental Europe have been more valued or more warmly welcomed than those who have come from Scandinavian countries. As translations of the report have been published in the German and French languages, it seems not only proper, but in a high degree desirable, that the natives of these foreign countries should be supplied with information in their own tongue in regard to the United States.

Yielding to a request which has for several years been pressed with great urgency, a translation of the report into the Swedish language has been made, and will be submitted at an early day to Congress, with the recommendation that 50,000 copies be printed for distribution in Scandinavian countries. An urgent demand has also been made for the translation of the report into the Slavic tongue, which is spoken not only in Russia and Poland, but in Bohemia, Silesia, and Moravia, countries from which streams of emigration would flow to the United States if the necessary information were supplied to those contemplating removal from their native soil. The English edition of 10,000 copies, printed by order of Congress for gratuitous distribution in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, is nearly exhausted, and a further issue of 5,000 copies of this report, with a map of the United States, is urgently recommended. As the report has been stereotyped, the cost of the paper, press-work and stitching would be small in amount. At no period has the demand for this document been more urgent than at present, and at no time have the benefits resulting from its circulation in that country been so marked as in the recent past.

The number of male immigrants from England, Scotland, and Wales during the last fiscal year was almost exactly the same as in the preceding one, being 51,121 in 1862 and 51,144 in 1871, and yet the increase in the skilled occupations of the adults over 1871 was 2,681. The greatest increase was exhibited in the following trades:

Blacksmiths, an increase of 92; boilermakers, 36; brick-makers, 48; carpenters, 376; joiners, 534; dyers, 22; gardeners, 107; jewelers, 46; manufacturers, 93; masons, 726; millers, 60; miners, 549; molders, 82; painters, 179; plumbers, 98; printers, 61; saddlers, 30; shoemakers, 160; spinners, 120; tailors, 38; weavers, 316, and wheelwrights, 74.

The immigrants from England included, also, many small farmers and some professional and business men, bringing with them ready money to invest in United States bonds and in farm stock. Indeed, the inquiries of parties who desire to purchase lands, either for themselves or for small companies of intending immigrants, have been so extensive as to considerably increase the correspondence of the Bureau. The total number of persons of foreign birth who, in the year ended June 30, 1873, decided to make the United States their future home is 459,803, of whom 275,792 were males, and 184,011 females, being an increase of 54,997, or 13¼ per cent. over the immigration of the fiscal year of 1872. The largest increase from any country was 25,734, or 18 1-5 per cent., from Germany; while from England, the excess over the previous year was 5,037, or 7½ per cent., and from Ireland 8,712, or 12½ per cent. The increase from France was nearly 59 per cent., being 9,317 in 1872, and 14,798 in 1873. If the average value of an immigrant, as stated by the undersigned in the report above referred to, be $800, the economical value of this addition to our population in the past year amounts to $367,842,460. It is respectfully submitted that so large an augmentation of our national wealth will justify the expenditure of a sum sufficient for the diffusion of such information as will serve to increase the volume of this tide of immigration.

Deep-Sea Discoveries.

One of the discoveries made by the deep-sea soundings of the Challenger expedition, which arrived recently at Bermuda from the Azores, is a mountain ridge that extends from Greenlaed to the month of the Amazon, on the coast of South America, and includes the whole volcanic region of the Azores. This ridge is nowhere more than two miles below the ocean level. Toward the east it is divided between Europe and Africa by an immense valley from two and a half to three miles in depth. The valley reaches north of the equator as far as the fifty-second degree of latitude. If this valley were not under water it would present a view of whose magnificence no idea can be formed, for in the north it extends to the gigantic mountains of Cape Verde and the Canary Islands, the latter of which, with the Peak of Teneriffe, would be 26,000 feet in height. Madeira would command, from a height of 20,000 feet, a view of this valley and another stretching toward the Mediterranean.

On the western side of the ridge is a vast undulating plain, which extends at an average depth of two and three-quarter miles to the American coast. Bermuda, which rises now only 200 feet above the ocean level, is in fact an isolated column 15,000 feet high, which would overlook an amphitheater of at least 500 miles in radius. Between the West Indies and America, and in the vicinity of the Azores, the water is of uniform depth and warmth. There was not much animal life found in the great depths. The blind crustacea appear to belong to the Western hemisphere; in this part these animals require many eyes. A sea garnel was caught which, singular to relate, had four eyes, two of which were in the front knee joints.

The recent horrible poisoning case in Montreal, in which a dozen people drank up nearly half a gallon of vinum colchici upon the supposition that it was whisky, has a very useful moral for inconsiderate drinkers. The above people, who are now all in the cemetery, found this drug, and, supposing it to be intoxicating liquor, went in and made a night of it, carousing and drinking in a manner which it would not be complimentary to the lower animals to call brutish. The whole miserable crew, men and women, died before morning. The most of the whisky sold nowadays is sure to kill sooner or later, but little social parties of this description, who devote a night to drinking and make a serious and energetic business of it, should be particular in ascertaining whether they are drinking the right poison.

How Indians Escape their Pursuers.

During the early part of the flight every precaution is adopted to prevent leaving a heavy trail, or one easily to be followed; to this end, instead of moving, as is customary, in single file, thereby leaving a clearly defined path, each warrior moves independently of his fellows, until all danger from pursuit is safely passed, when the party falls into single file, and, with the chief at their head, moves along in almost unbroken silence. If during an attack upon the frontier settlements the Indians should encounter unexpected and successful resistance, necessitating a premature withdrawal and flight on their part, they still resort to stratagem in order to secure their safety. In accordance with a plan previously formed and understood by each member of the party, and specially provided for an emergency, the war party finding themselves about to encounter successful resistance of the part of the frontiersmen beat a hasty retreat; but instead of taking their flight in a single direction and in one party, thereby leaving an unmistakable clue for their pursuers, the entire party breaks up into smaller bands, each apparently fleeing in an independent direction, a few of the best mounted usually falling behind to attract the attention of the pursuers, and give time to those of the party who are burdened with prisoners and captured stock to make good their escape. In such an emergency as this a rendezvous for the entire party has been previously fixed upon. Its location is usually upon or near some water-course or prominent landmark, distant perhaps thirty or forty miles; thither all smaller parties direct their course, each by a separate and usually a circuitous route. Should either of these smaller parties find themselves closely pursued, or their trail being followed and all efforts to throw the pursuers off prove unavailing, they relinquish their plan of uniting with the others at the established rendezvous, as that would imperil the safety of their comrades, and select a new route leading neither in the direction of the rendezvous or of the village, in order not only to elude but to mislead their pursuers. Then ensues a long and tiresome flight, until, having worn out or outwitted their pursuers, of whose movements they keep themselves thoroughly informed, they make their way in safety to the village. At the latter outlooks are constantly kept on some prominent hill to watch the coming of the absent warriors and give notice of their approach. A war party returning from a successful raid into the settlements, and bringing with them prisoners and captured stock, is an event of the greatest importance to every occupant of the village. Having arrived within a few miles of the village, and feeling safe from all danger from pursuit, the chief in command of the war party causes a signal smoke to be sent up from some high point along the line of march, well knowing that watchful eyes near the village are on the alert and will not fail to observe the signal and understand its meaning.—Gen. Custer, in Galaxy for December.

Advertising in Dull Times.

The Milwaukee Wisconsin relates the following:

"After the crash in '57, when everybody was almost scared to death, and the croakers predicted that the country had gone to smash, a dry goods house was opened in this city, which proceeded on the principle that in order to reach the hoarded money in the pockets of the people, the proprietors must sell at very reasonable prices and advertise very largely. They worked vigorously upon this principle. Their brother merchants who did not advertise predicted that the new comers would be ruined, as they paid too much for advertising. Nevertheless, they persisted. In a single year they paid five hundred dollars in gold to the Daily Wisconsin for advertising, and at the end of seven years they retired from business with a fortune of one hundred thousand dollars, while other merchants on the same street, some of them opposite their store, had failed."

And the New York Evening Post says: "We remember a similar instance among our own advertisers in the panic of 1857. A merchant continued his advertising in our columns during the whole period of stagnation, and notwithstanding many predictions that "it wouldn't pay." His testimony afterwards was that his sales were steady and his profits satisfactory, while many a merchant around him who 'could'nt afford to advertise,' saw his clerks stand idle behind the counters."

A financial panic does not mean that no one has any money. There is plenty of money in the country, and those who hoard it are just the ones to be eager for the "bargains" which a fall in prices hold out. But to buy they must know where to buy, and the merchant who tells them will receive their cash.

Life in India.

The usual routine of European life in India is to rise at "gun-fire" (five o'clock), go out for an airing in boat or palanquin for two full hours, bathe and dress at eight, take breakfast at nine, lunch at one, and siesta from two to four, when everybody retires, and, whether one wishes to sleep or not, he is secure from interruption, and as the full beneffit of being en dishabille for the two most oppressive hours of the day. At four the second bath is taken; at five all go out in full dress in open carriages, and after a rapid drive over some of the public thoroughfares, the horses are walked slowly up and down the esplanade, where all the fashionable world assemble at this hour to see and be seen, and exchange passing courtesies or comments. At half-past six, "the course" is deserted, and brilliantly-lighted dining-rooms are thronged with guests eager to test the quality of the rich and varied delicacies of which an oriental dinner consists. This is the principal meal of the day, and, occupying often two or three hours, it is made not merely an epicurean feast, but also an intellectual and social banquet. Strong coffee, served in the tiniest of porcelain cups, follows the guests on their return to the drawing-rooms, and music, conversation, reading and company fill up the hours till midnight, when the third bath is taken immediately before retiring.

THE FARMER.

An honest, healthy, sun-browned man comes slowly home at night,
Halts, tired, before his cottage 'neath the tempting shade to rest,
Removes his broad-brimmed hat and shows a face that's soiled, but bright,
And fans it with a zest.

squad of noisy little "Hessians" trooping down the lawn
For full two hours have watched the sun, as, sinking in the west,
It brought this hour for mirth and strife for who should first be drawn
Unto the farmer's breast.

The gayest hour of all the hours of all the day is this;
Care flies as each and all are to his shaggy bosom pressed;
The baby arms and baby mouths are pleading for his kiss—
The sweetest and the best.

They care not "papa's" face is soiled, his old clothes failing fast;
They know not of fatigue that brings the perspiration so,
And white hairs to his raven locks, and wrinkles—oh, so fast!
And money—oh, so slow!

They know not that 'tis too much toil makes "mama's" cheeks so white;
That there are only lilies where the roses used to blow;
The toil will end for her but when it takes her from their sight—
Better they should not know.

They know not of the matchless love that gave their little life;
They know not of the love that toils that they may live and grow;
They know not of the grinding of "hard times" and of the strife—
But farmers know.

Only such toil for love, for babes, for home, for life, for bread;
Only such tender pleadings goad him on from day to day;
Only such ceaseless, withering, maddening toil—oh, terror dread!
Can keep the "wolf" away.

And while this dismal specter gaunt stares at him day and night,
You swelling, strutting millionaire, behold how fat he grows
On this same farmer's toils and fruits and blood!
Oh, 'tis not right—
But 'tis the truth—God knows.

Oh, money kings! Oh, railroad kings! I pray reduce your freights.
Oh, Ceres fair, if thou dost rule o'er farmers' fates to-day,
Shell out your gold when corn is sold at decent Christian rates—
Ever so much I pray.

This cannot last, relief will come; 'twill come because it must;
One cannot grind his brother's throat beneath his heel of power;
With terror's rod the tyrant cannot rule—if God is just—
But just one little hour.

God only knows when tyrant's throne may tumble on his head;
He only knows the fate that rules our lives from day to day.
"Prayer moves the Hand that moves the world," some comforter hath said.
And we can always pray.

THE FARMERS' REVOLUTION.

Voice of the Press.

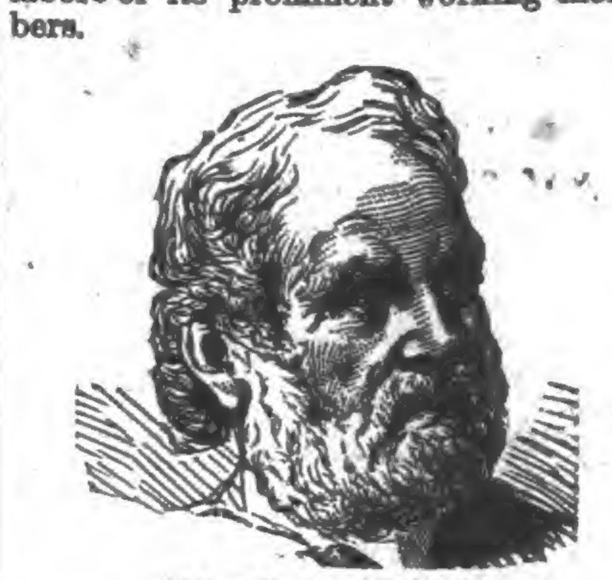
Heretofore the farmers have depended upon causes they did not inquire into for a demand for their products. They busied themselves only in the question of producing, depending upon the universal demand for their staple productions to furnish them money and buyers for their crops, and that policy was good enough until combinations were formed on a gigantic scale to control the price of their products, without regard to the supply and the demand. So long as the price was regulated by these universal and unerring laws, the farmer was content. But now we come to the occasion, so to speak, for the formation of granges among the agricultural classes. The farmer is of necessity compelled to rely upon the railroads, canals and navigable rivers as means of transportation of his products to the market. So long as there was an open competition among common carriers the farmer had no cause of complaint. But as the great aggregation of capital continues through the manipulations of stocks in New York, one road after another is swallowed up by monopolies, and competition is destroyed. Thousands of miles of the most important and, heretofore, parallel and competing lines fall into the hands of a single individual, or small ring of men. What was the situation of the farmer? On the one hand there was a combination of manufacturers and dealers fixing the price he should pay for everything he had to buy, and on the other hand was a gigantic railroad combination, dictating, in utter disregard of justice and equity, a price for everything he had to sell. For a long time the farmer endured the one. He was content to pay what was demanded so long as he was free to fix the price on what he had to sell. Notwithstanding there was no union or compact among them, there was still some consolation and defense in this. But when the agricultural classes were not consulted, and had no agency in determining the prices neither of what they bought nor of what they sold, the instinct of self-preservation impelled them to organize.—Lafayette Courier.

While the farmers are seeking some way out of the wilderness of their oppression, and looking for weapons in their own organizations with which to beat down monopoly, it might be well for them to leave the shadows alone and deal blows only against those who are in the flesh, and who have real brawn and muscle. We do not believe that the movement now going on in favor of Western interests is ephemeral. Its roots, we know, lie deeper than the surface. The causes that produced it have been at work for a long time, and if they do not succeed in breaking the hold of Eastern monopolists upon the country, the movement will have been commenced in vain, and the disenthrallment of Western interests put off for at least a decade longer.—St. Louis (Mo.) Dispatch.

Need we centralize the government any further in order to check the despotism of railroads? . . . The farmers have been goaded into making this demand, and we are not prepared to censure them on this account. They may be wrong in the mode of relief they suggest, but if in error, it is an error of the head and not of the heart. We do not believe the staunch farmers of the West mean to increase the powers of the General Government so as to interfere with the liberties of the people. They would not deliberately jeopardize their own interests. They are the people, and centralization would directly affect them.—Wilmington (N. C.) Star.

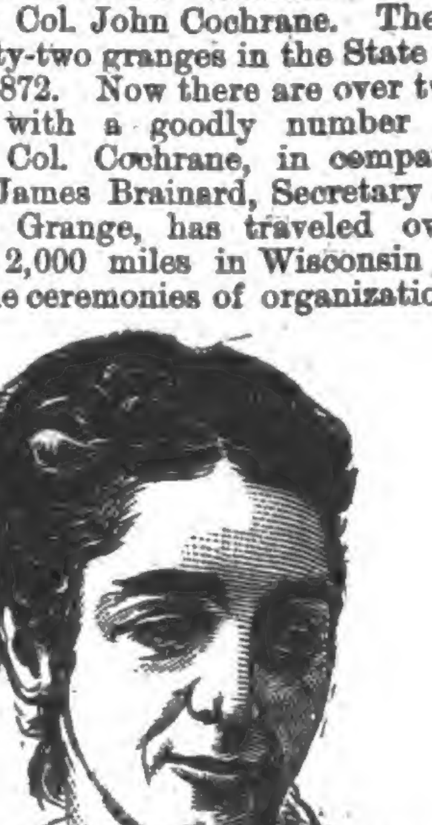
Patrons of Husbandry.

The rapid increase of granges and spread of the order of Patrons of Husbandry is largely due to the energy and labors of its prominent working members.



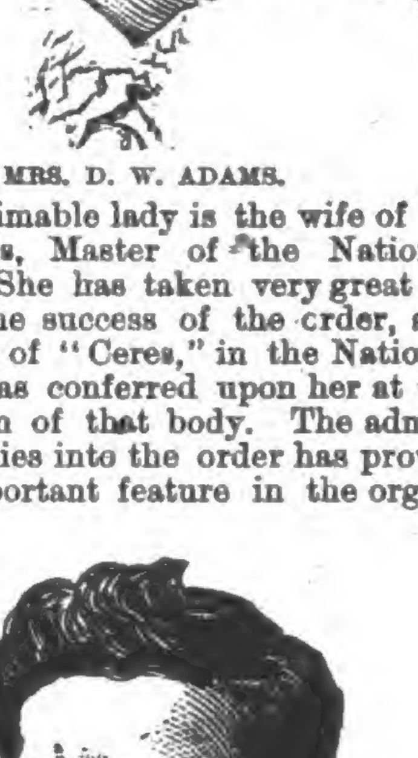
COL. JOHN COCHRANE.

The Master of the Wisconsin State Grange is Col. John Cochrane. There were twenty-two granges in the State in October, 1872. Now there are over two hundred, with a goodly number of councils. Col. Cochrane, in company with Mr. James Brainard, Secretary of the State Grange, has traveled over more than 2,000 miles in Wisconsin to conduct the ceremonies of organization.



MRS. D. W. ADAMS.

This estimable lady is the wife of D. W. Adams, Master of the National Grange. She has taken very great interest in the success of the order, and the degree of "Ceres," in the National Grange, was conferred upon her at the last session of that body. The admission of ladies into the order has proved a very important feature in the organization.



F. F. DUMBAULD,

Master of the Kansas State Grange, was elected to the office at its first meeting, which was held in July last. During the past few months, he has, with the assistance of the Secretary of the State Grange, George Spurgeon, organized nearly 500 subordinate granges. Among the fruits of the organization in Kansas, it may be mentioned that the prices of agricultural implements and other necessaries have been lowered from 30 to 40 per cent. below the former figures. Mr. Dumbauld was born in Pennsylvania; he is now 45 years of age. With his father's family he removed to Ohio at an early age, where he remained until he was eighteen. In 1864 he settled in Kansas, where he is widely known as an extensive farmer and a useful man.

Foreign Travel.

It is estimated there are over $100,000,000 spent annually in Europe by Americans or residents of America. About one-third of this sum is expended by former citizens of Europe, who are revisiting their native land. The balance is expended by pleasure-seeking and fashionable American people. The majority of these are the veriest snobs on the face of the earth. By accident and sharp practices they have made money fast, and they want to go where the great masses of the people won't recognize them as genuine shoddy. There is not one in ten of them can tell the difference between the statue of Venus and one of Hercules, or an oil painting from a chromo. It seems that the panic has brought these would-be genteel folks to grief. The failures of the banks from which they took drafts has caught them without funds, and they have had to telegraph for material aid to get home. We hope this may have the effect to check the insane desire to take a run to Europe by every fraudulent public officer, or Indian agent or trader, or watered-stock railroad operator, or ring contractor. The excuse has been, hitherto, that the living and hotel accommodations in Europe were so much cheaper than in this country, that it was a part of economy for people of leisure and wealth to go there. This year it is different. The hotel prices throughout Europe are more than they are in America.

The $100,000,000 spent mainly in an idle display of ignorance and dissipation in Europe, by citizens of America, would build 10,000 miles of narrow-gauge railroad, or 5,000 miles of the common-gauge road in this country. It would build a canal around the falls of Niagara, open the mouth of the Mississippi so as to make it navigable for any vessel that sails the ocean, or would remove the obstructions in the Mississippi near Rock Island and Keokuk, or of the falls of the Ohio at Louisville. Or it would build one hundred manufacturing establishments in this country that would cost $100,000 each, and give employment to 25,000 workmen.

If one-half of this huge sum, torn from the hand of industry mainly by the machinery of incorporated monopolies, had been left in the hands of the people, how much better would it have been for the world! The haunts of vice and folly in Paris and other European cities might not have been as well supported as they now are—the seedy Counts might not have made as eligible matches with ambitious and wealthy American ladies as they now may—but the money would have remained at home, to be expended in laudable and useful purposes.

About this mania for running to Europe, there is one ridiculous feature. It is this: Not one-half of the native Americans that go there have traveled their own country, or can give a European inquirer an intelligent account of its climate, resources or institutions.—Industrial Age.

Dangers to be Avoided.

Governments are usually classified into three kinds—Monarchy, Aristocracy and Democracy. A monarchy is a government in which the supreme power is vested in a single person. An aristocracy is a government in which the supreme power is vested in comparatively a small number of persons. A democracy is a government in which the supreme power is vested in the people at large. It is undoubtedly true that oppression is practicable and often practiced under monarchies and aristocracies. Many persons believe that this cannot be said of democracies. Their principal reason for this belief is, as they say, because the people will not oppress themselves. But of late the fallaciousness of such belief is fast becoming evident to many persons who heretofore believed in it, and it is surprising that it should impose upon any person. The action of the people is practically the action of the majority, and it is more than fallacious to say, much less believe, that the majority may not oppress the minority. Government, whatever its form, in the exercise of its authority, operates only on individuals, and it is useless to say that oppression and tyranny change their nature because they are the work of millions, instead of being the work of one, or only of a few men. Such a manifest truth is worth considering, and such truths are particularly worth considering by the American people at this time. It is a matter for the people to consider, if from the organized effort that capital is making to assume control of the Government, there is not an effort to change our Government from a democracy to that of an aristocracy. We believe that to be the tendency of things at this time. The money power is one of the evils that is inherent in a democracy, and it is one that the people must keep under guard. We don't mean that it should be made a prisoner of, but we mean that the people must not be idle or careless to any attempt that it might make to encroach upon other rights. Aristotle says about the evils that are inherent in a democracy, "Such a democracy being absolute in its sovereignty seeks to play the monarch, because it is not ruled by law, and so it becomes depotic. These flatterers are in high favor. Such a democracy is the parallel of an absolute monarchy. Both governments are of the same nature; both trample on good men; the popular decrees are counterparts of the royal ordinances; the demagogue and the courtier are identical; the courtier is all-powerful with the tyrant; the demagogue with the people. And why are the people's occasional decrees predominant over the laws? Because the demagogues bring back all things to the people. The demagogues are great and powerful in proportion as the people are lords and masters of the State, and as the demagogues are lords and masters of the people's resolves."

That language of the old philosopher so accurately describes the state of things in which we are placed, that it might naturally be supposed to be intended, by anticipation, to be a description of the United States, instead of being a description of human nature. With us it is too much the case that the people are the masters of the law, and the demagogues are masters of the people. But in this we must not despair. The popular despot is generally no worse than the monarch despot.

Every form of government has certain evils inherent in itself, and the efforts of all ought to be directed toward the abatement of those evils instead of being engaged in magnifying them. Let not the people be deceived by demagogues, either from the rostrum or the press, and let the people look to it that they do not lose their liberties by the subversion of the Government through the influences of an established moneyed aristocracy.—Lawrence Standard.

How Indians Climbs Trees.

In South America even the weakest woman may be, not uncommonly, seen plucking the fruit at the tree-tops. If the bark is so smooth and slippery that they cannot go climbing, they use other means. They make a hoop of wild vines, and putting their feet inside, they use it as a support in climbing. The negro of the west coast of Africa makes a larger hoop, round the tree, and gets inside of it and jerks it up the trunk with his hands, a little at a time, drawing up his legs after it. The Tihitian boys tie their feet together, four or five inches apart, with a piece of palm bark, and with the aid of this fetter go up the cocoa palms to gather nuts. The native women in Australia climb the gum trees after opossoms. Where the bark is rough they chop holes with a hatchet; then one throws about the tree a rope twice as long as will go around it, puts her hatchet on her cropped head, and, placing her feet against the tree and grasping the rope with her hands, she hitches it up by jerks, and pulls herself up the enormous trunk almost as fast as a man will climb a ladder.

The grave of Gen. Harrison, at North Bend, Ind., is almost obliterated, and a movement is on foot to have the remains moved to Spring Grove, and placed under a monument fitting to the memory of one so eminent.

Sitting Up With Her.

She was expecting him Sunday night; the parlor curtains were down, the old folks notified that it was healthy to go to bed at eight o'clock, and Johnny bribed with a cent to permit himself to be tucked away at sundown. He sneaked up the path, one eye on the dog and the other watching for th "old man," who didn't like him any too well, gave a faint knock at the door, and it was opened and he was esco ted into the parlor. He said he couldn't stay but a minute, though he didn't mean to go home for hours. She wanted to know how h s mother was; if his father had returned from York State; if his brother Bill's rheumatism was any better; and he went over and sat on the sofa so as not to strain his voice. Then conversation flagged, and he played with his hat, and she nibbled at the sofa tidy. He finally said it was a beautiful evening, and she replied that her grandfather predicted a snow storm. He said he said he guessed it wouldn't snow, as the moon wasn't crooked enough to hang a powder horn on the end; she said she didn't believe it would, either. This mutual understanding seemed to give each other courage, and he wanted to know if she had seen Bill Jones lately. She hadn't, said she, and she didn't want to. Then she went to talking about the donation visit which was to be given Elder Berry, and he carelessly dropped his hand on her's—his right hand—while his left sneaked along the sofa to get behind her shoulders. She pretended not to notice it, and he looked down at his boots and wanted to know if she thought mutton tallow rotted out boots faster than lard or lampblack. She couldn't say, but she had an idea that it did. He had just commenced to look fingers with her, when she discovered something ailed the lamp. She rose up and turned the light down a half, making the room look dim. It took him five minutes to get hold of her fingers again; she pretended to want to draw her hand away all the time. After a long pause, he lowered his voice to a whisper, and he said he didn't see what made folks love each other. She bit her lip and admitted her ignorance. He said he could name a dozen young men who were going to get married right away, and his left arm fell down and gave her a hug. Then he went over and looked out of the window to make sure that it was or was not going to snow, and, coming back, he turned the light down a little more, and then sat down and wanted to know if she didn't want to rest herself by leaning her head on his shoulder.

Ah, me! we have all been there, and who of us cared a cent when the old clock struck twelve, and we five miles from home? The old man was fast asleep, the watch dog gone a visiting, and the handsomest girl in the country didn't see why we need be in any hurry.

Perhaps I shouldn't have written of this, but as I was going by Saunders' the other day, thinking of the night I heard him whisper in her ear at spelling school that he'd love her very shadow as long as he lived, he raised the window and called to her, as she was picking up chips in the road:

"Sue Saunders, come in here and find the b'ar's grease for my sore heel, or I'll break every bone in your body?"

A strip of sand, now part of the land on which Trenton, N. J., is built, was thought to be of so little value, in 1805, that its owner in selling out his property did not think it worth while to mention it in the deed. As Trenton grew this sandy strip was covered with buildings, and the heirs of the original owner now claim possession, with so fair a prospect of getting it that a liberal offer has been made to buy their claim. The land which was valueless in in 1805, is now valued at $4,000.000.

"Unless you give me aid," said a beggar to a benevolent lady, "I am afraid I shall have to resort to something which I greatly dislike to do." The lady handed him a dollar, and compassionately asked, "What is it, poor man, that I have saved you from?" "Work," was the mournful answer.
